We herewith present to the public the first number of "CLARK'S ANNUAL DIRECTORY OF THE CITY OF DETROIT," trusting that its merits will be fully appreciated, while its errors are kindly overlooked.

The publication of a book of this character is ever attended with heavy expense and severe labor—a fact with which, since the commencement of the work, we have had ample opportunity to become acquainted. The collection and compilation of fifteen thousand names—giving to each its proper spelling, occupation and address—together with the proof-reading and binding of the entire book, has been done in the remarkably short space of forty working days, in view of which fact it would be presumptuous in us to claim exemption from errors; and, therefore, for such as may have escaped our notice, we beg the kind indulgence of a generous public, trusting that our zealous efforts to publish, promptly, a thorough and reliable Directory, will be duly acknowledged by all who have the interest of our beautiful city at heart. We also hope that the production of this work at this time will give greater satisfaction than if it had been delayed six months hence, in order to secure a greater degree of correctness.

We have completed our arrangements for issuing the work regularly, hereafter, on the first day of June in each year, and as our aim shall be to render each successive number an improvement upon the one preceding it, we trust that in future years we shall be able to present the citizens of Detroit with an Annual Directory that shall leave nothing to be desired in order to render the work perfect.

With many thanks to the enterprising business men and to the citizens of Detroit generally, who have so generously aided us with their encouragement, and soliciting their future support, we remain

The Public's most obedient servant,

CHARLES F. CLARK.

EDWARDS'
HISTORICAL, STATISTICAL AND COMMERCIAL REVIEW
OF THE
STATE OF MICHIGAN.

CHAPTER I.

THE history of Michigan, a name derived from the Indian word Michisagyegan, signifying a Great Lake, exhibits three distinct epochs—the Romantic, the Military and the Practical. The first period extends from the middle of the seventeenth century to the year 1760, when its dominion was transferred from France to Great Britain. The second commences with the Pontiac war, extending through the successive struggles of the British, the Indians and the Americans, to obtain possession of the country. The third period dates from the conciliation of the Indian tribes in 1815, to our own day—the enterprising, working and commercial era in the history of the State—the age of agriculture, of mechanics, of manufactures, of ships and harbors, of canals and cities, and most important of all, the age of railroads.

Referring our readers to the carefully prepared History of Detroit, which follows this condensed sketch of Michigan, for details of the first settlement of the State, by the French missionaries, and the Coureurs des Bois, I shall briefly glance at the early history of the Northwest, of which Michigan forms a part, and then describe the present condition of the State, as it is in the year 1862.

In 1535 Jacques Cartier, of St. Malo, discovered and explored the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, and was the first Frenchman to point out to his Government the vast inland seas that roll their mighty waters through its channel, to the ocean. In 1608, Samuel de Champlain, of Bruage, a marine officer, “who delighted marvellously in adventures,” established a French colony at Quebec, and, seven years later, pushed his discoveries westward to Lake Huron.

In 1634, two French missionaries reached the Saut Ste. Marie, within the present limits of the State of Michigan, and set forth the claims of the Cross to the wondering red men, who gazed for the first time with mingled awe and admiration upon the “pale faces.” In 1654, two Canadian fur-traders, extended their commerce to lakes Superior and Michigan, and soon after penetrated as far as Green Bay, in Wisconsin. In 1664, Claude

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1862, by RICHARD EDWARDS, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Michigan.

Jean Allouez, the first successful missionary among the Indians of the Northwest, visited Lake Superior, establishing missions there, and also at the Saut Ste. Marie. Here Allouez remained for two years, ministering to the spiritual wants of the children of the wilderness; lighting the Catholic torch at the council-fires of more than twenty tribes, and counseling with them, also, in temporal affairs.

Among the various Indian nations who sought for the friendship of the French missionary, were the Pottawatamies and Miamis, who came from the unexplored regions of Lake Michigan, and the Illinois, from the interior of the State which receives its name from that tribe, bringing with them accounts of the boundless prairies, of which Allouez says: "Their country is the best field for the gospel. Had I leisure, I would have gone to their dwellings, to see with my own eyes, all the good was told me of them." Here, too, came the Sioux, from the southwest of Lake Superior, from whom Allouez learned the existence of the "Father of Waters," the name of which they gave as the "Mechasèpè." To this enterprising and pious priest, belongs the credit of giving the impetus to the discoveries and settlements which carried the fleur de lis of France from the shores of Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico.

A few years later, Jean Marquette, of Laen, better known as Pere Marquette, a devoted and pious missionary, with a company of natives, entered an Indian village on the north side of the Straits of Michilimackinac. During the year that he was planting his colony and erecting his chapel, at Iroquois Point, which he designated St. Ignace, he resided on the island of Mackinac. Other portions of the country were explored, and colonies and missions established by Allouez, Dablon, and their associates, at Main-tin Islands, Green Bay, at the mouth of the Fox River, on Lake Winnebago, at Milwaukee, and other points adjacent to the Lakes. In 1670, Nicholas Perrot, an experienced traveler, was dispatched by M. Talon, the Intendante of Nouvelle France, as Canada was then called, to the Northwestern tribes, for the purpose of inducing them to fix a meeting at some convenient place, with a view to discussing the rights of the French crown. This fearless adventurer penetrated among the nations dwelling by the great lakes, and was successful in persuading them all to send deputies to the Saut Ste. Marie. The Sieur de St. Lussan met the assembled Chiefs in May, 1671, and Allouez, acting as interpreter, induced them to acknowledge the sovereignty of his King, and with ceremonies, impressive and appropriate to the savage mind, took formal possession of the Northwest, including Michigan. A cross, bearing the name of France, was erected on a hill above the village, and whilst being raised, the vexilla was chanted by the assembled Frenchmen, to the great delight of the savages.

M. Talon, the Intendante, was at this time recalled; but, before he departed, he planned a scheme of exploration more extensive than any that had yet been undertaken in Nouvelle France. From the information derived by Allouez, and from the traditions current among the tribes who assembled at the Saut Ste. Marie, it was believed that to the southwest of Canada, there flowed a vast river, called the Mechasèpè, or Mississippi, whose course was neither towards the great Lakes of the North, nor the Atlantic, to the East. It was therefore surmised that the unknown flood must pour its waters either into the Pacific Ocean, or the Gulf of Mexico. The wise M. Talon was so much impressed with the importance to France, of possessing a channel of navigation to the waters of the South and West, that, upon his departure from America, he made arrangements to have the course of the unknown and mysterious stream explored. He intrusted the arduous and dangerous duty to Louis Joliet, an adventurous and able merchant, a native of Quebec. The Comte de Frontenac, Governor of Canada, gave his aid and countenance to the expedition, and in the meantime himself extended the line of French settlements to the shores of Lake Ontario, building there the fort which bore his name, and opened up communication with the numerous tribes westward of the Alleghany mountains.

In the year 1672, while Marquette was engaged in delivering the message of redemption to the Indians, and while they reverently listened to the matins and vespers which were daily chanted in his chapel at Point St. Ignace, Joliet arrived at Mackinac, bearing a commission from Frontenac, empowering him to select Marquette as a companion and enter upon a voyage of discovery. The winter was spent in making preparations for their journey, the specific object of which was the discovery and exploration of the Mississippi. To this end, Joliet and Marquette endeavored to gain all the information possible respecting the unknown stream, from the most noted western voyageurs and trappers; and from the information thus acquired, a map of the Mississippi was made, including its course and direction, and all the streams known to empty into it.

It was a bright and beautiful morning in May, 1673, that Joliet, accompanied by Marquette and six Frenchmen, as companions, left Mackinac, in two frail canoes, on their expedition, unappalled by the great and terrible dangers which the Indians represented would beset their path, and directed their course towards Green Bay. On the 7th of June, the voyageurs reached the mission of St. Francis Xavier, at the mouth of the Fox River, where delegations of the Winnebagoes, Pottawattamies and Miamis received Joliet and his associates. "My companion," said Marquette, "is an envoy of France, to discover new countries, and I am ambassador from God, to enlighten them with the gospel." Joliet presented them with various gifts, and requested two guides to accompany the expedition to one of the tributaries of the great river of which they were in search. The request was granted, and a mat, to serve as a couch, for the voyage, was given in return for his presents.

On the 10th of June, after uniting in prayer with the tawny savages on the banks of the river, the party, accompanied by two warriors of the Miamis, the most civilized and intelligent of the native tribes with whom they had met, they launched their canoes and started on their voyage of discovery. Proceeding up the Fox River, so broad at its entrance into the Lake, but gradually narrowing, and divided by marshes into a laby rinth of channels, they found the wild oats growing so thickly in the river that they seemed to be passing through fields of corn. When the party reached the rapids, they were obliged to wade up the streams, drawing their canoes after them. Having at length reached the portage, of a mile and a half, where a narrow ridge of land divides the rivers that flow—one to the northeast, the other to the southwest—they launched their canoes on the waters of the Wisconsin. Here the guides departed—"leaving us," says Marquette, "in the hands of Providence," to find their way into the solitudes of an unknown world. Sailing down the stream, where they no longer had to breast a strong current, as the Wisconsin River flows to the west, they passed along, amid alternate hills and prairies—past lofty forests and flowery fields—daily observing deer and herds of buffalo, of which latter Marquette counted upwards of four hundred in a single flock, they at length reached the "Father of Waters," on the morning of the 20th of June, 1673, which they entered "with a joy that cannot be expressed." Floating with the rapid current down the Mississippi, Joliet and his companions continued their course through verdant and majestic solitudes, with illimitable prairies and island groves, where no sign of human life appeared, until, having sailed a distance of about two hundred miles, they were gladdened by the sight of foot-prints on the sandy beach of the western shore. Joliet and Marquette thereupon unhesitatingly landed, and following the well worn trail for some six miles, came upon two Indian villages, situated upon the banks of the Des Moines River, in Iowa, which proved to be those of the "Pewaries" and "Moing-wenas." Several Indians advanced to meet them, bearing the pipe of peace, brilliant with many-colored plumes, and said, in answer to Marquette's salutation, "We are Illinois," which means, in their tongue, "we are men," and is designed to express their superiority over other tribes. An aged Chief received them in his cabin, and with uplifted hands, said, "How beautiful is the sun, Frenchmen, when you come to visit us! Our whole village awaits you. You shall enter in peace all our dwellings."

After a sojourn of several days, during which Marquette communicated to them knowledge of the one true God, and of the king of France, and his great captain, Frontenac, and had carefully gleaned all the information respecting the Mississippi and the natives that inhabited its banks, they were attended to their canoes by hundreds of warriors and their principal chief, who, before they reëmbarked, hung round Marquette's neck the pipe of peace, embellished with the head and neck of brilliant birds, and all feathered over with plumage of various hue, the mysterious arbiter of peace and war, the sacred Calumet, a safeguard among the nations.

The French adventurers proceeded on their voyage down the Mississippi, observing the towering rocks at Alton, and past the Missouri, known to them by its Indian name of "Pekitanoni," which Marquette resolved, in his mind, to one day ascend to its source, and crossing the vast continent, to carry the Cross to all the nations of the new world. Journeying on, they passed the Ohio, whose banks were dotted with the villages of the peaceful Shawnees, who ran to meet them when they landed, and entertaind the explorers with hominy and fish and game, and proceeded as far south as the Arkansas, where they met with hostile tribes, carrying guns, and speaking a language unknown to them or their interpreter. Having ascertained that the Mississippi neither flowed into the Pacific, as they had fondly hoped, nor into the Atlantic ocean, east of Florida, and fearing that, by venturing farther, they might fall into the hands of the Spaniards, thus losing all the fruits of their toils and dangers, they determined to return to Canada.

Accordingly, on the 17th of July, they changed their course, and ascended the Mississippi, until, reaching the Illinois River, they determined upon returning by that route. As they passed up the Illinois, they beheld a country unparalleled for the fertility of its boundless and magnificent prairies, covered with millions of wild flowers of every hue, with herds of buffalo and deer, and vast flocks of wild turkeys, ducks, and other varieties of game. Arriving at the portage of the Illinois, they met the Kaskaskias, a tribe living on its banks, who entreated Joliet and his comrades to remain among them. Expressing, however, their desire to pursue their journey, one of the chiefs, with several warriors, accompanied them, by way of the Des Plaines, to the Chicago River, and thence to Lake Michigan. Joliet, Marquette, and their companions, reached the site of the now populous city of Chicago, in September—being the first white men who ever visited the prairie on which stands "The Garden City." Sailing along the western shore of the lake, they again found themselves at Green Bay, and were most heartily welcomed by the brethren at the St. Francis Xavier mission, having been absent a little more than three months. Joliet hastened back to Quebec, to announce their discoveries, while Marquette remained at the mission to recruit his health, occupying his time in preparing his journal of the voyage, accompanied by a map of the Mississippi, which he named "Reviere de la Conception." The map is still preserved in the Jesuit College at Montreal.

After having passed the following winter and summer at the St. Francis Xavier mission, orders came from Montreal to establish a mission among the Illinois, with whom Joliet and Marquette had had so friendly an interview the preceding year. He accordingly commenced his journey, but, on reaching Chicago, finding the river closed and his health infirm, Marquette resolved to spend the winter among the Miamis, the tribe which, at that date, occupied that portion of Illinois adjacent to the head waters of Lake Michigan. He accordingly, with two French traders for companions, spent the long and severe winter of 1674-5 in Chicago—his chapel bell daily calling around him, in his humble log cabin, the wild children of the forest, to listen to his morning and evening hymns, and to the teachings of this pious and devoted follower of Ignatius Loyola.

On the return of spring, Marquette, with his two countrymen, and several Miami Indians, who had become much attached to the faithful missionary, proceeded to Kaskaskia, on the Illinois river, where he arrived at the end of a fortnight, and at once entered upon the labors of his new field. After instructing the red men as to the purpose of his mission, he called them together on the open prairie, and erected a rude altar, surmounted by the cross. Bright and cheering were the prospects of converting the children of the forest to Christianity, when his work was suddenly interrupted by a return of his distressing malady, which assumed so alarming a type, that Marquette felt that his end was near, and that if he would again behold his beloved mission, which he had established at Mackinac, he must return at once. The Kaskaskias were much grieved at the departure of the dying missionary, and a number of the tribe accompanied him to Chicago, where he at once embarked with his two French companions. As they proceeded along the eastern shore of the Lake, Marquette, conscious of his approaching dissolution, directed the voyageurs to enter a small river in Michigan, and pointing to an eminence near the lake, said, "Bury me there." His attendants erected a rude shelter for him, and received his dying directions; after which he desired them to leave him alone.

———"In the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down,
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks
And supplication."

In accordance with Marquette's directions, the two Frenchmen committed his body to the ground at the spot indicated, near the lake, and upon the banks of the river, which has ever since borne his name, and erected a rude cross at the head of his grave. Thus passed away, "life's fitful fever o'er," one of that noble band of pioneer missionaries, whose memory the great Northwest "will not willingly let die."

The account brought back to Quebec by Joliet, aroused a deep interest among the people of Canada, and it was deemed a matter of national importance to extend their discoveries. There chanced to be residing in Quebec at that time a young Frenchman of fortune and good birth, named Robert, Chevalier de La Salle, ambitious, brave and energetic. He had emigrated to America with the hope of gaining fame and wealth in the New World. The aspiring mind of La Salle was at once excited. He immediately sailed for France, to procure the means of fitting out an expedition. Through his own influence, and that of the Governor-General of Canada, with Colbert, the Minister of Finance, he succeeded in obtaining a monopoly of the traffic with the Indians, and a commission for perfecting the discovery of the Mississippi and its tributaries. Associating with him the Chevalier de Tonti, a brave officer, who had lost an arm in the Sicilian wars, La Salle sailed, with thirty men, from Rochelle, July 14, 1678, and in two months reached Quebec. Hastening from thence to Fort Frontenac, where he at once commenced the preliminary arrangements for the expedition, he was soon after joined by Louis Hennepin, a Franciscan friar, of the Récollet order, appointed by his religious superiors to accompany La Salle's expedition.

On the 18th day of November, the discoverers embarked in a vessel of ten tons burden, the first that ever sailed the waters of Lake Ontario. Transporting their stores around Niagara Falls to an Indian village on Lake Erie, La Salle erected a fort there, and during the winter and spring, built a vessel of sixty tons, called the "Griffin," in compliment to the Comte de Frontenac, whose armorial bearings were adorned by two griffins as supporters. Having sent forward messengers, with merchandise, to trade for furs and skins, as well as to apprise the various tribes of his contemplated settlements, the expedition at length set sail, on the 7th of August, 1679, the children of the woods gazing with astonishment upon the huge vessel, and listening with mingled awe and wonder, to the reverberation of its artillery. Passing through the Detroit river, they reached Mackinac on the 27th of the same month. After building a fort there, La Salle sailed for Green Bay, from which place, having disposed of all his merchandise at an immense profit, in exchange for a rich cargo of furs, his vessel was sent back for another supply of stores and merchandise for traffic with the Indians.

On their way to the head waters of Lake Michigan, in canoes, their friendly relations were for the first time interrupted with the Indians, by a party of Ontaganies having robbed them of a military coat. The French demanded restitution of the stolen garment, under threat of putting the offender to death. The Ontaganies having divided the coat into a number of small pieces, for general distribution, found it impossible to comply with the demand, and supposing that no other resource remained, presented themselves before the French in battle array. However, through the wise mediation of Hennepin, the quarrel was amicably arranged, and friendly relations restored. After a tedious and tempestuous voyage of six weeks, La Salle reached the mouth of the St. Josephs River, in Michigan, where he erected a small trading-house with palisades, then, and for a long time afterward, known as the Fort of the Miamis.

Weary of waiting for the return of the Griffin, LaSalle set out early in December, with a party of forty-four men and three Recollets, including Father Hennepin and the Chevalier de Tonti, to pursue his cherished scheme of exploring the Mississippi. Ascending the St. Josephs to its short portage, to the Kankakee, they descended the latter river to its junction with the Illinois, and proceeded as far as an Indian village, situated near the site of the town of Ottawa. Here they supplied themselves with provisions, and continued their course down the Illinois, charmed with the beauty and fertility of the country. On the 4th of January the expedition reached Lake Peoria, and was kindly received by the natives, who exhibited great joy when told that colonies were to be established among them. A growing discontent, which first displayed itself among a portion of La Salle's followers, by an attempt to poison him and his faithful adherents at a Christmas dinner, here broke out in open mutiny, and they demanded his return. La Salle, however, succeeded in partially allaying their discontent, saying, "Remain with me until spring, and none shall remain thereafter, except from choice." He at once erected a fort near where Peoria now stands, which, thwarted as he had been, and almost despairing of success in his glorious undertaking, he named Creve-Cœur.

Early in February La Salle sent Hennepin with Dacan and three other Frenchmen, to explore the Upper Mississippi. Leaving Tonti in command, he set out on foot with companions for Fort Frontenac, for the purpose of procuring men and means to pursue his enterprise. His route was along the southern shores of lakes Michigan, Erie, and Ontario. What a journey at such a season, through a pathless wilderness of nearly twelve hundred miles, without guides or shelter, and only such food as their guns could procure for them! On arriving at Fort Frontenac, La Salle found his worst fears realized. The Griffin with her valuable cargo was lost, and his agents had defrauded him. La Salle undaunted by his misfortunes, soon obtained new supplies, and with a number of followers returned to Illinois, only to find his posts on the Illinois river deserted. His faithful associate, Tonti, who erected a post at Rock Fort, as directed, and called it St. Louis, owing to serious difficulties with the Indians, had been compelled to abandon both posts, and had returned to Mackinac, to which place La Salle at once proceeded. Gathering together their scattered company, they again retraced their steps to the South, this time by way of Chicago. The passage of the party by this route is the first mention made in history of Chicago, by name. They passed to the Mississippi safely, and were received with various welcomes by the tribes who dwelt along its banks, as they journeyed on, from day to day. On the 9th of April, with his followers under arms, amid the firing of musketry, the chaunting of the Te Deum, and shouts of "vive le roi," La Salle, as he gazed with his comrades upon the broad ocean, took formal possession of the vast valley of the Mississippi, in the name of Louis XIV, king of France and Navarre.

Neither our limits, nor the space of our narrative of the early history of Michigan, will allow us to follow the fortunes of the bold and ambitious La Salle in his journeyings to and fro, until in the solitude of a dreary Texan wilderness, the career of this iron-hearted discoverer was brought to a sad and untimely end, by one of his lawless followers.

It has been already mentioned that La Salle had sent Hennepin and Dacan to explore the Mississippi. They ascended the river past the mouth of the Missouri and Wisconsin, and soon reached beyond those beautiful falls to which the adventurous priest gave the name of St. Anthony. Continual danger threatened these travelers, from the caprice or hostility of the powerful tribes of the Upper Mississippi Indians, and they were held for a long time in a cruel captivity. They were, however, at length permitted to depart, and using their liberty, after many privations and much suffering, reached Canada in safety.

The disaster and disappointment attending the expeditions of La Salle and Hennepin, for sometime deterred others from venturing to explore the dangerous regions of the Northwest, and the government totally neglected to occupy the splendid heritage offered by the labors of Allouez, Hennepin, Joliet, La Salle, and Marquette. It was left to the love of fame and glory, or the hope of gain, and to the religious zeal of Jesuit and other missionaries, to continue the exploration of the solitudes of a new continent. The Baron le Hontan was one of the earliest of these dauntless travelers. While employed upon the lakes by the French Government he became intimately acquainted with the manners and customs of the Indians, and from his intercourse with them, formed the project of perambulating the remote depths of the country west of the Mississippi. His actual discoveries were probably not very important, and his record of them is not always reliable; but he was the first to learn the existence of the Rocky Mountains, and of that vast ocean which separates the western coast of North America from the continent of Asia.

CHAPTER II.

THE conflict which began when a few French and English settlers first landed on the Canadian and Virginia shores, was terminated on the 13th day of September, 1759, upon the Plains of Abraham. The gallant Wolfe was victorious, and Great Britain's title to the Northwest was established, and her title confirmed by the treaty of Paris, February 1st, 1763. From that date, until March 1st, 1784, the Northwest was a part of Virginia, and governed by her colonial laws. By the war of the Revolution, begun at Lexington and Concord, and terminated October 19, 1781, the United States wrested the Northwest from British rule. The celebrated Ordinance "for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio," was passed July 13, 1787. General Arthur St. Clair was appointed Governor of the new Territory, which embraced the whole Northwest. The Ordinance provided for a Legislative Assembly when the inhabitants should number 5,000. The period for organizing such a branch of the government having arrived, Gov. St. Clair issued his proclamation October 29, 1798, declaring the fact, and ordering an election of Representatives to be held December 3d. The election took place and the House organized January 22, 1799. On October 3d, William Henry Harrison was elected the first Delegate to Congress from the Territory. May 7, 1800, Indiana Territory was formed. November 29, 1802, Ohio was admitted into the Union as a State. January 11, 1805, Michigan Territory was formed and Gen. William Hull appointed first Governor. February 3, 1809, Illinois Territory was created. December 11, 1816, Indiana was admitted into the Union. August 16, 1818, Illinois became a State. April 20, 1836, the Territory of Wisconsin was formed. January 26, 1837, Michigan was admitted into the Union, and Stephen T. Mason elected first Governor of the State. Michigan, the thirteenth State admitted into the American Union under the Federal Constitution, is situated between latitude $41^{\circ} 40'$ and $48^{\circ} 20' N$, and longitude $82^{\circ} 25'$ and $90^{\circ} 34' W$. It is bounded on the north by Lake Superior, which separates it from the British possessions; east by St. Mary's Falls and River, Lake Huron, the lake and river St. Clair, the Detroit River, and Lake Erie; South by Ohio and Indiana, and west by Lake Michigan.

With this brief outline of its early history, we will now pass to the present condition of the State. Michigan has now a population of nearly a million of inhabitants, with a land area of 56,243 square miles, or 35,995,500 acres. Besides 19 unorganized, it has 54 organized counties. The principal cities and towns are Lansing, its capitol, Detroit, the commercial emporium of the State, Ann Arbor, the seat of the University of Michigan, Grand Haven, Grand Rapids, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Mackinac, Marshall, Pontiac, Saut Ste. Marie, and Ypsilanti. Its principal rivers are the Ontonagon and Tequamenon, flowing into Lake Superior; the Sheboygan, Thunder Bay, and Sauble and Saginaw into Lake Huron; the Raisin into Lake Erie, and the St. Joseph, Kalamazoo, Maskegon and Manistee into Lake Michigan. Most of these are small, but the streams are so numerous that all portions of the State are well watered.

The climate of Michigan is one of extremes, but much tempered by the proximity of the lakes. That of the southern peninsula is comparatively mild, while that of the northern, especially in the winter season, is cold and rigorous, and beyond the north line of Indian corn, but here, however, the hardier grains mature. The southern part of the State produces Indian corn and the winter grains abundantly, and is the great agricultural district of Michigan. The soils in this portion are deep, chiefly a dark loam, often mixed with gravel and clay, and very fertile. The northern peninsula, with some few exceptions, is rugged and has open soil. It is, however, well timbered with ash, oak, aspen, birch, elm, hemlock, maple, spruce and white pine. Much of the southern is occupied by oak openings and prairie, with a large portion of forest in which ash, basswood, beech, cherry, cypress, cedar, chestnut, dogwood, elm, hickory, sugar, maple, linden, oak, pine, sycamore, and tamarack are the prevailing growths. The State abounds with natural objects and antiquities interesting to the traveler; among the former, the most noteworthy are the Pictured Rocks on the shore of Lake Superior, about thirty miles out of Saut Ste. Marie. There are the Sandstone Bluffs, of various colors, worn by the action of the waters into grotesque forms resembling castles, temples, arches, colennades, &c., which, from the deck of a passing steamer on the lake, present the appearance of a gorgeous picture. These remarkable rocks extend along the shore for about twelve miles, and rise from 200 to 300 feet above the water. Sometimes cascades shoot over the precipice so that a vessel may sail between the descending water and the natural wall of rock. In the northern peninsula there are sometimes found remains of very ancient mines and mining tools, and it is quite evident that a race well advanced in civilization, occupied the country at some distant period of the past, although the Indians found in possession by Allouez and other early explorers from Canada, had no traditions of any such race or people.

The value of imports and exports for the ten years from 1850 to 1859, inclusive, ending June 30, were as follows:

Years.	Imports.	Exports.	Years.	Imports.	Exports.
1850.....	$144,102	$132,045	1855.....	$ 281,379	$ 568,091
1851.....	182,146	191,426	1856.....	880,664	981,028
1852.....	196,240	145,152	1857.....	1,018,558	1,502,606
1853.....	211,230	353,685	1858.....	672,934	5,188,707
1854.....	204,286	434,495	1859.....	1,067,339	3,624,624

We must now take a glance at the condition of the Lumber, Copper, Iron and other great interests of Michigan, beginning with the most important—

THE LUMBER INTEREST.

It is now almost universally admitted that the State of Michigan possesses in her soil and timber the material source of immense wealth. While in years past it has been difficult to obtain satisfactory information concerning the real condition and natural resources of a large portion of the surface of the Lower Peninsula, the re-survey of portions of the government land, the exploration of the country by parties in search of pine, the developments made by the exploring and surveying parties along the lines of the Land Grant Railroads, and the more recent examinations by the different commissions for laying out the several State roads under the acts passed by the last Legislature, have removed every doubt in reference to the subject. The universal testimony from all the sources above mentioned, seems to be that in all the natural elements of wealth the whole of the northern part of the Peninsula abounds.

The pine lands of the State, which are a reliable source of present and future wealth, are so located and distributed as to bring almost every portion of the State, sooner or later in connection with the commerce of the lakes. The pine timber of Michigan is generally interspersed with other varieties of timber, such as beech, maple, white ash, oak, cherry, etc., and in most cases the soil is suited to agricultural purposes. This is particularly the case on the western slope of the Peninsula, on the waters of Lake Michigan and along the central portion of the State. On the east and near Lake Huron, the pine districts are more extensively covered with pine timber, and generally not so desirable for farming purposes. There are good farming lands, however, all along the coast of Lake Huron, and extending back into the interior.

A large proportion of the pine lands of the State are in the hands of the Canal Company and individuals who are holding them as an investment, and it is no detriment to this great interest, that the whole State has been thus explored and the choicest of the lands secured. The developments which have thus been made of the quality and extent of the pine districts, have given stability and confidence to the lumbering interest. And these lands are not held at exorbitant prices, but are sold upon fair and reasonable terms, such as practical business men and lumbermen will not usually object to.

It is a remarkable fact that almost every stream of water in the State, north of Grand River, penetrates a district of pine lands, and the mouths of nearly all these streams are already occupied with lumbering establishments of greater or less magnitude. These lumber colonies are the pioneers, and generally attract around them others who engage in agriculture, and thus almost imperceptibly the agricultural interests of the State are spreading and developing in every direction. The want of suitable means of access alone prevents the rapid settlement of large and fertile districts of our State, which are not unknown to the more enterprising and persevering pioneers, who have led the way through the wilderness, and are now engaged almost single-handed in their labors, not shrinking from the privations and sufferings which are sure to surround these first settlements, in our new districts.

The Grand Traverse region, with its excellent soil, comparatively mild climate, and abundance of timber of every description, is attracting much attention, and extensive settlements have already commenced in many localities in that region. The coast of Lake Michigan, from Grand River north, for upwards of one hundred miles, to Manistee River, presents generally a barren, sandy appearance, the sand hills of that coast almost invariably shutting out from the view the surrounding country.

North of the Manistee, however, this characteristic of the coast changes, and the hard timber comes out to the lake, and presents a fine region of country extending from Lake Michigan to Grand Traverse Bay and beyond, embracing the head waters of the Manistee River. This large tract of agricultural land is one of the richest portions of the State, and having throughout its whole extent extensive groves of excellent pine timber interspersed, it is one of the most desirable portions of the Peninsula. Grand Traverse Bay, the Manistee River and the River Aux Becs Scies, are the outlets for the pine timber, and afford ample means of communication between the interior and the lake for such purposes. The proposed State roads will, if built, do much towards the settlement of this region.

A natural harbor, which is being improved by private enterprise, is found at the mouth of the River Aux Becs Scies, and a new settlement and town has just been started at this point. This is a natural outlet for a considerable portion of the region just described.

The lands here, as in other localities in the new portions of the State, are such as must induce a rapid settlement whenever the means of communication shall be opened.

The valley of the Muskegon embraces every variety of soil and timber, and is one of the most attractive portions of the Peninsula. The pine lands upon this river are scattered all along the valley in groups or tracts, containing several thousand acres each, interspersed with hard timber, and surrounded by fine agricultural lands.

The Pere Marquette River and White River, large streams emptying into Lake Michigan, pass through a region possessing much the same characteristics.

This whole region is underlaid with lime rock, a rich soil, well watered with living springs, resembling in many features the Grand River Valley.

Beds of gypsum have been discovered on the head waters of the Pere Marquette.

The unsettled counties in the northern portion of the State, the northern portion of Montcalm and Gratiot, Isabella, Gladwin, Clare, and a portion of Midland, are not inferior to any other portion. There is a magnificent body of pine stretching from the head of Flat River in Montcalm county to the upper waters of the Tettibewassee, and growing upon a fine soil well adapted to agriculture.

This embraces a portion of the Saginaw Valley, and covers the high ground dividing the waters of lakes Huron and Michigan.

The eastern slope of the Peninsula embraces a variety of soil and timber somewhat different in its general features from other portions of the State. The pine lands of this region are near the coast of the lake, and lie in large tracts, but with good agricultural land adjoining.

There are in the Lower Peninsula, in round numbers, about 24,000,000 acres of land.

Taking Houghton Lake, near the center of the State, as a point of view, the general surface may be comprehended as follows:

The Muskegon Valley to the southwest, following the Muskegon River in its course to Lake Michigan. The western slope of the Peninsula directly west, embracing the pine and agricultural districts along the valleys of several large streams emptying into Lake Michigan. The large and beautiful region to the northwest embracing the valley of the Manistee and the undulating lands around Grand Traverse Bay. Northward, the region embraces the head-waters of the Manistee and Au Sauble, with the large tracts of excellent pine in that locality, and beyond, the agricultural region extending to Little Traverse Bay and the straits of Mackinac. To the northeast, the valley of the Au Sauble, and the pine region of Thunder Bay. To the east, the pine and hard timber extending to Saginaw Bay. To the southeast, the Saginaw Valley; and to the south, the high lands before described in the central counties.

That portion of the State, south of Saginaw and the Grand River Valley, is so well known that a description here would be unnecessary.

Thus we have yet undeveloped over half of the surface of this Peninsula, embracing certainly, 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 of acres, possessing stores of wealth in the timber upon its surface, reserving soil for the benefit of those, who, as the means of communication are opened, will come in and possess it, and thus introduce industry and prosperity into our waste places.

We have not the figures at hand, but it is probable that at least one-tenth of the area north of the Grand River is embraced in the pine region. The swamp lands granted to the State will probably cover nearly double the area of the pine lands proper. The remainder, for the most part, is covered with a magnificent growth of hard timber, suited to the necessities of our growing population and commerce.

The statistics herein furnished will give some idea of the importance and value of the lumber traffic in this State. The trade in pine timber, lumber, shingles, and other varieties of lumber, with the traffic in staves form one of the most important branches of manufacture and commerce in our own State, and this trade alone is now accomplishing more for the development and settlement of the country than all other causes in operation.

THE PINE LUMBER TRADE.

The lumber manufactories in Detroit and its suburbs are eleven in number. The following are the names of the proprietors and the amount cut last year for each :

	FT. LUMBER.	PCS. LATH.
H. A & S. G. Wight.....	6,500,000	2 220,000	Baughman, Hubbard & Co.	3,378,080 1,04,3013
Samuel Pitts.....	3,500,000	482,000	Kibbee, Fox & Co.....	3,000,000 800,000
H. E. Benson.....	3,254,029		N. Reeve.....	800,000 200,000
— Moffat (est.).....	1,500,000		Davis & David.....	2,000,000
W. Warner & Co.....	194,370		Copeland.....	1,000,000
Brooks & Adams.....	3,800,000		Total.....	20,426,479 4,745,300

The aggregate of capital employed by these is $1,440,000. The above amount is no criterion of their capacity. The same mills cut 46,000,000 feet in 1856, and nearly the same in 1857, and their probable capacity is 54,000,000. Warner & Co. run their mill only about five weeks last year, and are now retiring from business. One of the others sustained a temporary loss of business by fire. The product will in the aggregate be doubled next season.

The logs sawed in Detroit are procured from St. Clair River, Black River, Mill Creek and Belle River. As a large share of that sold here has been on contract, there has been no great fluctuation in the market at this point. On the first of July the rates by the cargo were $25@ $26 for clear and $19@ $20 for second clear; on the first of October, $24 for clear, and $18 for second clear.

Last winter and spring were very unfavorable for lumbering. Owing to the small quantity of snow, but few logs were got out, and many of them being on small streams, owing to the failure of the usual spring freshets, were not sawed, so that upon the whole the mills of the State turned out only about half the amount of their capacity.

The market opened in the spring with flattering prospects. Buyers from a number of important points in the Eastern States, previously deriving their supplies from Maine, visited our State, anxious to secure contracts for choice lumber, and the opinion prevailed that the demand would exceed the supply. The prospect encouraged manufacturers to make unwonted exertions in turning out all the stock that could be rendered available, which involved increased expense. In some places, as was the case at Saginaw, a considerably large amount was got out in the early part of summer. About the close of June, the market experienced a sudden and unlooked-for depression, after which prices tended steadily downward, falling to such a low point before the close of the season that manufacturers on the west coast generally suspended their shipments. Those on the east coast continued to ship, but their shipments to a very great extent still remain unsold. We are cognizant of 7,000,000 feet held in that way by only four manufacturers.

The accounts this winter are very favorable, but the idea that obtains, fixing the amount at a very high figure, is vague and erroneous. The true state of the case is, that manufacturers, as a general thing, in view of the depressed condition of the trade, have been making calculations to do a light business, and have got out their logs sooner than they expected, and will on the whole do rather more than they had anticipated, having gone into the woods lighthanded. The most experienced judges concur in fixing the amount of logs got out this winter on River St. Clair, at Port Huron and Saginaw Bay, but not including the rivers above, at 175,000,000 feet. In the Saginaws, it is ascertained that about 100,000,000 will be got out. Taking the entire east coast, it is thought the logs this winter would exceed those of last by fifteen to twenty per cent.

By Custom House statements of shipments, added to actual receipts at one of the receiving points—Chicago—it will be seen below that for 1859 a little over 269,000,000 feet is the amount of shipments arrived at. These figures, taken in connection with the estimates of those competent to judge, render it certain that the actual amount shipped out of the State did not vary materially from 400,000,000 feet. There being no penalty involved in the failure of masters of vessels to report, there is great carelessness in the matter. The Cleveland, Toledo and Sandusky shipments are, at the outside, not more than half reported. Those reported to Buffalo, Oswego &c., are a little nearer the truth, but they fall considerably below the mark.

The amount made in 1859 did not vary materially from that shipped. In the district embracing the River St. Clair, Port Huron and the Lake Shore, 6,000,000 feet more were wintered over last year than this. On the west coast it was different generally, so that the variation in the aggregate cannot be much either way. The capacity of the mills in the pine lumber region is 900,000,000 feet, or possibly a little more.

SHINGLES.

As regards the amount of shingles made, even dealers are much in the dark. To add 50 per cent. to the Custom House returns would certainly be within bounds for the eastern coast. This would give 120,000,000 as the amount. For the west coast, if we take the amount received at Chicago, say 165,000,000, with an additional twenty-five per cent. for that received at Milwaukee, and then estimate that two-thirds of the whole amount were from the west coast of Michigan, which is doubtless true, we have 137,500,000 as the amount shipped by that coast, making 257,500,000 for the whole State.

STAVES.

The improved demand for staves has greatly stimulated the production, and in localities where the production of pine lumber is decreasing, that of staves is taking its place.—At Saginaw 2,500,000 were got out last year, and this year there will be full as much, or more. The greatest activity prevails, and dressing by machinery has been started. At Lakeport, Burchville, Lexington, Port Sanilac, Forester, Point aux Barque and Forestville, 850,000 were got out last year; from Port Huron and St. Clair 750,000. The amount turned out in the whole state could not have been short of 20,000,000.

LATH.

An immense amount of lath were turned out. A mill that can turn out three millions lumber, generally makes one million of lath. On this basis about 133,000,000 must have been turned out. The supply generally exceeds the demand.

VALUATION, CAPITAL EMBARKED IN THE TRADE, &c.

The lumber on the east coast is worth at the mills $9 per M.; that on the west $7. At an average of $8, the amount made last year would be worth $3,200,000. The value of shingles at $2 per M., was $515,000, and the lath at $1 per M., was worth $133,000.

We are enabled to present a nearly complete list of names of owners, with the amount of capital respectively, which will be of some interest, both at home and abroad. So far as the east coast is concerned, the figures are in the main entirely reliable, being upon the authority of one of the best men in the State, who knows whereof he advises. Those for the west coast, though not perhaps so strictly correct as the others, will as a general thing, be found within bounds. We hope the statistics will prove an incentive to lumbermen to be more particular hereafter in furnishing information :

An intelligent gentleman, who, at our instance, visited all the establishments around Saginaw, and procured statistics, reports the amount of lumber manufactured as follows:

Place.	No. of Mills.	Feet.	Place.	No. of Mills.	Feet.
Bay City	11	20,000,000	Saginaw City	4	14,000,000
Portsmouth	4	5,000,000	Bad River	2	4,500,000
Zilwaukee	1	3,000,000	Rafted Lumber		4,000,000
Carrolton	1	2,800,000
East Saginaw	8	19,750,000	Total		73,050,000

Valuation, at $8,50 per M., $620,925.

NOTE.—The rafted lumber includes what was cut by the small mills above and floated down, and also, that brought in from the country mills by teams.

Of the above lumber, 63,000,000 has been shipped; the rest is now on the docks.

The supply of pine in some few localities is becoming exhausted, and some few mills have ceased operating. This is the case at Lexington, but the machinery and capital have been taken elsewhere. At the present ratio of consumption, the supply of pine must rapidly become diminished, but profitable employment will then be found in the manufacture of hemlock and hard-wood. Some little has already been done in the way of turning out hemlock. The manufacture of hard-wood lumber is increasing very rapidly.

The following has been furnished as exhibiting the profits of lumber manufacturing. The result arrived at is perhaps an extreme figure, but the business unquestionably offers tempting inducements for the investment of capital:

After our explanations with regard to custom house statistics, we give them below for what they are worth, as being interesting in their details. As the figures represent not feet, but M feet, the intelligent reader will of course add three cyphers (000) to each sum given.

[As Detroit is not an importing point, the above must have gone forward to other ports, at least for the most part.]

When general prosperity once more returns, lumber will be the first article to improve. It will then be the last interest to decline.

In the annual statement of the Chicago Press and Tribune, reported receipts are given from the following places, with the amount of Lumber and Shingles from each, respectively:

	Lumber.	Shingles.	Lumber.	Shingles.
Grand River (in addition to Grand Haven).....	5,000	..	Holland.....	298

				24,690

In addition to the above, 4,578,193 feet of Lumber and 111,000 Shingles were received, in the aggregate, by vessels which had taken out clearances at Ogdensburg, Oswego, Buffalo, and Sandusky, and whose cargoes were credited to those places, but every iota of which was shipped from Michigan. With all these additions, the reported shipments of the State foot up as follows:

	Lumber.	Shingles.	Lath.
Reported here.....	141,595,000	81,466,000	19,823,000
Additional at Chicago.....	127,513,000	24,801,000
Total.....	269,108,000	106,267,000	19,823,000

The following gives, by way of recapitulation, the amount reported to each of the more prominent lake ports respectively, from the several ports of the State, including Detroit:

	Lumber, Shingles,		Lath, Staves,
	M.	M.	M.	M.

If accurate terms could be given of the receipts at the ports on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, it is altogether probable, that nearly or quite the amount we have estimated would be shown, viz: 400,000,000 feet. As we have hereinbefore stated, not more than half the shipments to the Lake Erie ports, ever find their way to our Custom House books.

FOREIGN STAVE AND LUMBER TRADE.

Our readers are aware that a trade of great importance has sprung up within two or three years between Detroit and other lake ports, and the leading seaports of Europe. The particulars of its inauguration are familiar to the public. Of the vessels which cleared hence in this trade in 1858, one was owned and sent out by a merchant of this city; another was loaded by a Cleveland house; the others were all owned or chartered by Capt. D. C. Pierce, the enterprising pioneer of the trade. His first venture on the Kershaw, notwithstanding some few incidental circumstances that worked to his disadvantage, was productive of some direct profit, but a much greater profit enured to himself, and those who followed him in this important commerce, by his becoming well versed in the European trade, insomuch as to be enabled to avail himself of the peculiar advantages offered by each market, as well as in determining the character of freight most profitable to carry. The cheapest, best and safest means of transporting the diversified products of the West, and particularly the region of which Detroit is the center, to the European markets, returning with foreign fabrics in exchange, had long challenged the attention of capitalists, who saw in it the germ of a mighty commerce, but seemed to lack the practical knowledge and tact necessary to put the ball in motion. Last year twenty-two vessels cleared from the different lake ports, mostly from Detroit.

Another important point which is now in a fair way to be gained, is the making of European consumers acquainted with the fact that their wants can be supplied to any desired extent. When this information becomes general, the consumption must be vastly stimulated, affording one of the most inviting fields for enterprise known in the commercial annals of the world. The resources of the State are amply sufficient to afford employment for half a century to a ten-fold larger number of vessels than have yet engaged in it. By a carefully copied estimate, it has been ascertained that in prosperous times the annual product of our pineries is hard upon TEN MILLION DOLLARS. Large as this sum is, it is the opinion of those who are well qualified to form an estimate, that it may be easily surpassed by the product of our hard timber. Take for example the region around Saginaw Bay, which is perhaps the most remarkable locality in the world as respects the quality and variety of hard wood timber. Here, for near a hundred miles in extent, upon streams debouching into the Bay, are dense forests of the choicest oak, with a profusion of hickory, black walnut, white ash, whitewood, and other desirable varieties. The manufacture of agricultural implements, as well as many other articles that afford employment to the toiling millions of the old world, must receive a new impetus when it is found that wood admirably adapted to their construction can be had direct from our forests, at the moderate rate at which it will bear transportation. So of birdseye maple, for cabinet ware, red elm for carriage hubs, and other varieties applicable to specific uses. We have designated such as abound in great plenty. The profusion of the growth is in fact equalled only by its accessibility, the whole country being so permeated by streams that it can be floated off with very little trouble.

The Saginaw district, important and extensive as it is, comprises but a small portion of our hard-wood lumber region. In addition to numerous almost interminable forests of the north, equally accessible and almost equally valuable, there are extensive regions in the interior where timber abounds of such choice quality as to abundantly warrant railroad transportation hither. Although some of the shipments last season were of the far-famed Canada oak, shippers all concur in assuring us that the Michigan timber was held in as high estimation, if not higher, than any other offered in the foreign market. A most significant fact, coming right to the point, came under our observation a few months since. In the summer of 1858 five passenger cars for the Southern Michigan Road were built at Adrian, which unprejudiced judges pronounced the finest ever built in the United States. Every foot of timber in them—as well as every pound of iron—was of Michigan production. After being in use some twenty months, these cars were for the first time overhauled for repairs, along with a number of eastern cars, which had been in use for a like period of time, when it was found that the latter, owing to the inferior quality of their timber, cost for repairs as many dollars as the Michigan cars did cents! We have the authority of gentlemen of the highest respectability for stating this as a literal fact.

The following is a complete list of the vessels which cleared for European ports in 1859, together with the character of their cargoes, respectively, and the ports to which they sailed:

Bark D. C. Pierce,	Staves,	Liverpool.
“ Allies,	Lumber and staves,	Cork.
“ W. S. Pierson,	Lumber and staves,	Greenock.
“ Massillon,	Lumber and staves,	Liverpool.
Brig J. G. Deshler,	Staves,	Glasgow.
“ Caroline,	Lumber and staves,	Liverpool.
“ Black Hawk,	Staves,	London.
Schr R. H. Harmon,	Staves,	Liverpool.
“ J. E. Warner,	Staves,	Liverpool.
“ Gold Hunter,	Staves,	Cork.

Schr Dousman,	Staves,	London.
" Valeria,	Lumber and staves,	Liverpool.
" Vanguard,	Staves,	Liverpool.
" Grand Turk,	Lumber,	Hamburg.
" St. Helena,	Lumber and staves,	Cork.
" Chieftain,	Lumber and staves,	London.
" C. H. Walker,	Lumber and staves,	Liverpool.
" M. S. Scott,	Lumber,	Hamburg.
" E. Bates,	Lumber and staves,	Liverpool.
" H. Barclay	Staves,	London.
" Republican,	Lumber and staves,	Cadiz.
" Messenger,	Staves, &c.,	Calais.

Of the above, the Messenger cleared from Buffalo; the Pierson and Republican from Milan, Ohio; the Massillon and Valeria from Cleveland; the Scott loaded at St. Joseph and was sent out by a Milwaukee house; all the others either loaded at this port, or were owned or chartered here. Eight of the number were chartered by Messrs. Aspinall & Son, and two of the others were owned in Detroit.

The following is the aggregate amount of Lumber and Staves shipped to Europe in 1859, exclusive of the cargoes from Cleveland, Milan, and Buffalo:

West India staves, No.	692,057
Standard pipe staves, No.	142,662
Lumber, feet.	474,693

The Lily, of Kingston, was the first vessel that ever passed down from the lakes to the ocean, bound to an European port. Her destination was Liverpool. This was about the year 1847. She afterwards sailed in the Quebec and Liverpool trade, but was lost, we believe, on her third ocean voyage.

As collateral to this trade, an important commerce has sprung up between the lake cities and the Atlantic ports which promises to increase rapidly. Prior to 1857, the passage of vessels from the Welland Canal to the ocean was of very rare occurrence. As a matter of curiosity, we present a complete statement of the vessels which passed through the canal bound for Atlantic or European ports, with the year of their sailing, avoiding a repetition of the list above given, up to the year 1860. The Dean Richmond, and those clearing in 1857 and 1858, all sailed for Europe. Those designated in this list as having sailed in 1859, all cleared for Atlantic ports:

1847.... American steam revenue cutter Dallas.	1858.... American schooner Harvest.
—.... Canadian bark Arabia.	" American bark Pamela Flood.
1848.... American bark Eureka.	1859.... American bark Magenta.
1850.... Canadian schooner Scotia.	" American brig Sultan.
1854.... Canadian schooner Cherokee.	" American brig Indus.
1855.... Canadian bark Reindeer.	" American brig Kate L. Bruce.
1856.... American schooner Dean Richmond.	" Canadian schooner Union.
1857.... American bark C. J. Kershaw.	" American schooner Karl Spangler.
" English schooner Madeira Pet.	" American schooner Muskingum.

THE COPPER INTEREST.

This great interest of Michigan was first brought into public notice by the enormous speculations and the mad fever of 1845. The large spur of country which projects far out into the lake, having its base resting on a line drawn across from L'Anse Bay to Ontonagon, and the Porcupine Mountains for its spine, became the El Dorado for all copperdom of that day. In this year the first active operations were commenced at the Cliff Mine, just back of Eagle River harbor. Three years later, in 1848, work was undertaken at the Minnesota, some fifteen miles back from the lake at Ontonagon.

The history of the copper mines on Lake Superior shows that even the best mines disappointed the owners at the beginning. We give the facts relative to the three mines at present in the Lake Superior region to illustrate this. The Cliff mine was discovered in 1845, and worked three years without much sign of success; it changed hands at the very moment when the vein was opened, which proved, afterwards, to be so exceedingly rich in copper and silver, producing now on an average 1,500 tons of stamp, barrel, and mass copper per annum.

The Minnesota mine was discovered in 1848, and for the first three years gave no very encouraging results. The first large mass of native copper, of about seven tons, was found in a pit made by an ancient race. After that discovery much money was spent before any further indications of copper were found. This mine yields now about 2,000 tons of copper per annum.

The same has been experienced at the Pewabic Mine. That mine commenced operations in the year 1855, with an expenditure of $26,357, which produced $1,080 worth of copper; the second year it expended $40,820, and produced $31,492 of copper; in 1857 $54,484 of expenses produced $44,058 worth of copper; in 1858, the amount expended was $109,152, and the receipts for copper $76,538.

The Pewabic will undoubtedly take its place among the dividend-paying mines of the present year.

It is scarcely twelve years that mining has been properly commenced in that remote region. At that time it was difficult, on account of the Rapids of St. Mary's River, to approach it by water with large craft. Being more than a thousand miles from the center of the Union, destitute of all the requirements for the development of mines; every tool, every part of machinery, every mouthful of provisions, had to be hauled over the rapids, boated along the shores for hundreds of miles to the copper region, and there often carried on the back of man and beast to the place where copper was supposed to exist. Every stroke of the pick cost tenfold more than in populated districts; every disaster delayed the operations for weeks and months.

The opening of the Saut Canal has changed all this and added a wonderful impetus to the business, the mining interests, and the development of the Lake Superior country. Nearly one hundred different vessels, steam and sail, have been engaged the past season in its trade, and the number of these destined largely to increase year by year, an indication of the growth of business and the opening up of the country. For the growth in the copper interests we have only to refer to the shipments from that region year by year. These, in gross, are as follows :

1853.....	2,535 tons.	1858.....	6,025 "
1854.....	3,500 "	1859.....	6,245 "
1855.....	4,544 "	1860.....	8,593 "
1856.....	5,357 "	1861, est.,.....	8,408 "
1857.....	6,094 "

The facts of development would hold generally true with regard to the other industrial interests of that vast country.

Marquette, Portage Lake, Ontonagon, Copper Harbor, Eagle River, and Eagle Harbor, and the mines adjacent, are almost the only places where the primeval forests have been cleared to afford a field for the enterprise of man. Judging from the events of the past ten years, it is impossible to conjecture what the country may become in the future. It is already ascertained beyond cavil that it possesses agricultural capacities of no mean character, contrary to the generally received opinion that obtained until comparatively a recent date, an opinion that was assented to without due inquiry into the real state of the case. In a good share of the country, including many localities contiguous to the mines, farming can be profitably conducted. Within the last two or three years several settlements of farmers have been formed a few miles south of Marquette, whose success has exceeded their anticipations. Here there is a large tract of very desirable country, the soil being a rich loam, the timber mostly good sized maple, the face of the land comparatively even, with springs of the best water on almost every quarter section. The land is for the most part subject to private entry, or preëmption. When we bear in mind the important consideration that there is close at hand a market at high prices for all that can be grown, the inducements to settlers certainly assume a peculiarly inviting character. The locality we have described is not an exceptional case; there is a very extensive region south of the mines, possessing an exuberant soil, and every requisite for successful farming. All that is wanting is good roads, which we doubt not our Legislature will make provision for at no far distant day.

The Copper region is divided into three Districts, viz.: the Ontonagon, the most northern, the Keweenaw Point, the most eastern, and the Portage Lake, lying mostly below and partially between the range of the two. In the first are situated the Minnesota, the Rockland, the National, and a multitude of other mines, of lesser note, profit or promise. In the second are the Cliff, the Copper Falls, and others. In the last are the Pewabic, Quincy, Isle Royale, Portage, Franklin and numerous others. Each district has some peculiarities of product, the first developing more masses, while the latter are more prolific in vein-rock, the copper being scattered throughout the rock.

There have been since 1845 no less than about 120 Copper Mining Companies organized under the general Law of our State. The amount of capital invested and now in use, or which has been paid out in explorations and improvements, and lost, is estimated by good judges at $6,000,000. The nominal amount of capital stock invested in all the companies which have charters would reach an indefinite number of millions. As an offset to this, it may be stated that the Cliff and Minnesota mines have returned over $2,000,000 in dividends from the beginning of their operations, and the value of these two mines will more than cover the whole amount spent in mining, and for all the extravagant undertakings which have been entered upon and abandoned. While success has been the exception and failure the rule in copper speculations, yet it must be admitted that these exceptions are remarkably tempting ones. Doubtless there is immense wealth still to be developed in these enterprises, and this element of wealth, in the Lake Superior region, is yet to assume a magnitude now unthought of.

THE IRON INTEREST.

Our State is gradually but surely taking the rank to which she is entitled as regards both the manufacture and production of iron. The first shipment of pig iron of any consequence was made by the "Pioneer Iron Company," in the fall of 1858.

The Lake Superior iron has been proclaimed the best in the world, a proposition that none can successfully refute. Its qualities are becoming known in quarters where it would naturally be expected its superiority would be admitted reluctantly, if at all. It is now sent to New York and Ohio, and even to Pennsylvania—an agency for its sale having been established in Pittsburgh. For gearing, shafting, cranks, flangs, and, we ought by all means to add, car-wheels, no other should be used, provided it can be obtained. Important as the subject is, money-wise, when life is at stake, the former consideration shrinks into comparative insignificance. The cause of the breaking of the machinery of the steamers plying upon our neighboring waters, has been in nearly or quite every instance traced to some defect in the iron, and would have been avoided if Lake Superior iron had been used.

Messrs. C. Kellogg & Co., have recently turned out a cannon for the United States from this iron. They pronounce it the best material in the world for this purpose, which opinion they maintain by an array of incontestible facts.

A large amount of capital is invested in the iron interest in Michigan, as the following figures prove:

Companies.	Capital.	Companies.	Capital.
Pioneer.....	$150,000	Eureka Iron Co.....	117,500
Jackson.....	300,000	Dr. G. B. Russell & Co.....	60,000
Collins.....	150,000	Detroit and Lake Sup. Iron Manufac. Co	90,000
Cleveland.....	300,000	Ford & Philbrick's Steam Forge.....	25,000
Lake Superior & Iron Mountain R. R. Co	700,000
Northern Michigan Iron Co.....	110,000
Wyandotte Rolling Mills.....	236,000
			$2,238,000

Marquette is the only point on Lake Superior where the iron ore deposits have been worked. There are deposits of iron in the mountains back of L'Anse, but this wonderful region leaves nothing more to be desired for the present. At a distance of eighteen miles from the lake, are to be found iron mountains named the Sharon, Burt, Lake Superior, Cleveland, Collins and Barlow, while eight miles further back lie the Ely and St. Clair mountains. Three of these mountains are at present worked, the Sharon, the Cleveland and the Lake Superior, and contain enough ore to supply the world for generations to come. The mountains further back embrace tracts of hundreds of acres, rising to a height of from four to six hundred feet, which there is every reason to believe, from the explorations made, are solid iron ore. The extent of the deposits is perfectly fabulous, in fact, so enormous as to baffle computation. The ore, too, is remarkably rich, yielding about seventy per cent. of pure metal. There are now in operation at Marquette, three Iron Mining Companies, and two blast furnaces for making charcoal pig iron, the Pioneer and Collins. The Pioneer has two stacks and a capacity of twenty tons pig iron per day; the Collins, one stack, capable of turning out about eleven tons. The Northern Iron Company has recently built a large bituminous coal furnace at the mouth of the Chocolate River, three miles south of Marquette.

Each of the Mining companies, the Jackson, Cleveland and Lake Superior, have docks at the harbor for shipment, extending out into the spacious and beautiful bay which lies in front of Marquette to a sufficient length to enable vessels of the largest dimensions to lie by their side and to be loaded directly from the cars, which are run over the vessels and "dumped" into shutes, which are made to empty directly into the holds. The process of loading is therefore very expeditious and easy.

The quality of the iron of Lake Superior is conceded by all to be the best in the world, as the analysis of Prof. Johnson, which we reproduce, shows. The table shows the relative strength per square inch in pounds:

Salisbury, Conn., iron.....	58,000	Lancaster county, Pa.....	58,661
Swedish, (best).....	58,184	Russia (best).....	76,069
English cable.....	59,105	Common English and American.....	30,000
Centre county, Penn.....	59,400	Lake Superior.....	89,582
Essex county, New York.....	59,962

The manufacture of pig iron at Marquette will probably be carried on even more extensively as the attention of capitalists is directed to it. The following may be considered a fair statement of the cost of producing one ton of pig iron at the Pioneer Iron Co.'s works:

1½ tons iron ore, at $1.50 per ton.....	$ 2.50
125 bushels charcoal at 7 cents per bushel.....	8.75
Fluxing.....	.50
Labor.....	2.50
Incidental expenses.....	1.00
<hr/>
Cost at the works.....	15.00
Freight on R. R. and dockage.....	1.37
Cost on board vessel.....	$16.37

The quantity of wood required for charcoal for both furnaces, is immense. The Pioneer furnace requires 2,500 bushels of coal in twenty-four hours; and in blast as they are, day and night, for six months, and at a yield of forty bushels of coal to a cord of wood, it would require 15,000 cords of wood to keep them going. The company has had 120,000 cords chopped this season. This vast consumption of wood will soon cause the country to be completely stripped of its timber. Coal will then come into use. The business of manufacturing pig iron may be extended indefinitely, as the material is without limit.

These facts exhibit the untold wealth of Michigan in Iron alone, and point with certainty to an extent of business that will add millions to our invested capital, dot our State with iron manufactories of all kinds, and furnish regular employment to tens of thousands of our citizens, while our raw material and our wares shall be found in all the principal markets of the world.

But few interests this year have suffered in an equal degree with that of iron. The shipments of ore, which had rapidly increased to 120,000 tons in 1860, fell off this season to about 30,000 tons. The establishments on Lake Superior weathered this great and unlooked for depression, and have kept at work, though on a somewhat reduced scale. At a rough guess there is at present 25,000 tons on the docks. At Marquette, mining has been prosecuted only to a very limited extent, the ore being just as well in its native bed as out of it, as matters stood.

THE FISHERIES.

The superior fish, found in such profusion in our noble lakes and rivers, while they afford a highly prized luxury for immediate consumption, form one of our leading articles of export, and are very justly regarded as constituting one of our greatest interests.

It is estimated by men of intelligence that the value of our yearly catch of fish is greater than that of all taken in fresh waters in the thirty-two remaining States of the Union. This may at first blush seem like a broad assertion, but it is no doubt strictly within bounds. If the claim be not too much of the nature of a truism, we may add that so far as quality is concerned, the superiority of our finny tribes is even more strongly marked than in regard to quantity. In the sluggish streams that abound in "ten degrees of more effulgent clime," the fish partake of the slimy properties of their native element; it is only in the limpid waters of the North that they are found of flavor so unexceptionable as to please an epicurean taste, or exalt them to the dignity of a staple of commerce. Fish possess peculiar qualities to commend them as an article of food, independent of the arbitrary preference of the epicure. They are universally esteemed as a wholesome and nutritious diet. In that pleasant work, Irving's "Astoria," a tribe of Indians are described who subsisted entirely on fish, whose rotund appearance contrasted strongly with the physique of their brethren of the forest. The profusion with which the finny tribes propagate their species is a peculiarity said to be imparted to those who partake freely and regularly of them for food, a supposition which would seem to be strongly supported by facts. Fishermen are proverbial for the number of their descendants. One of the tribe who dries his nets in Sarnia, is the happy father of nineteen children, and we can cite numerous proofs almost equally striking in support of this theory.

The fisheries have always been a leading subject in the governmental policy of sea-board nations. They are a prime source of revenue, and have been the cause of numerous wars. The serious controversy between the United States and Great Britain concerning the Newfoundland fisheries, is still fresh in the memory of our readers. Recently the earnest attention of the French Government has been directed to propositions for the artificial propagation of fish, as a means of affording good and cheap food to the people, at a merely nominal cost. The gradual diminution of the species, as well as the ultimate extinction of the large birds and quadrupeds is everywhere a condition of advanced civilization and the increase and spread of an industrial population. To provide a remedy for the evil, the science of pisciculture has latterly attracted no small degree of attention, and at this time gentlemen prominently identified with our fishing interest have it in contemplation to stock lakes in the interior of Michigan, with a view to the prosecution of the science.

Most of the fish packed on Lake Huron, and rivers St. Clair and Detroit, find their way into the Ohio market. The trade with that State has rapidly increased, but in its early stages it had some difficulties to contend with, to one of which we will briefly allude. Some twelve or fourteen years ago, a large quantity of fish, not less than 8,000 to 10,000 barrels, which had been caught in Lake Superior, were in the possession of a single dealer, who had stored them in the large warehouse recently torn down at the Detroit and Milwaukee Railway dépôt. He had opportunities to dispose of them at $8 per barrel, but refused to sell them for less than $10, and the result was that they were kept so long that many of them spoiled. They were complained of as a nuisance, and 1,500 barrels were turned into the river at one time. Part of the lot was, however, sent to Ohio, and the effect was, for a time, extremely prejudicial to our trade, requiring a great deal of explanation before the Cincinnati dealers could be again induced to stand in the position of customers. But when confidence once more became fully restored, the circumstances seemed to have the effect to precipitate the trade between the two cities. At least, it grew rapidly from that day, our neighbors purchasing freely of our staple articles, and sending us sugar and molasses in return. Thus, as in Samson's time, honey was gathered from the carcass of the dead lion. Ohio has become a very large consumer of our fish, and her influence is being extended rapidly into Indiana.

The habits of fish are as interesting as anything in the animal economy, constituting a beautiful study of nature, but this branch does not come within the scope of our article, and we must content ourselves with a brief description of the principal varieties, particularly such as are held in highest repute for packing, with such statistics as we have been able to procure.

WHITE FISH.—These are more highly prized than any other kind found in our waters, being decidedly the most delicious in a fresh state, and, when packed, command a higher price than any other by $1 per bbl. They are found in the Straits and all the lakes. They spawn in the fall in the Straits and in shoals and on reefs about the lakes. They are caught in seines, gill nets, trap nets, and with spears; never with hooks. Those found in Detroit River come up from Lake Erie regularly in the fall to deposit their spawn. They were found in our lakes and rivers in vast quantities when the white man first visited their shores. They constituted, with other kinds, the principal food of the white and Indian voyageurs as they coasted around the lakes, and were invaluable to the first settlers of the country, who perhaps in some cases, but for the assistance they afforded, would have been compelled to relinquish their settlements. They could catch a supply at any time, and they then had an unfailing resort when their crops failed. White fish were a great favorite with the Indians. They would give many times their weight in trout or any other species in exchange for them. It is said that a person can subsist longer upon them than any other kind.

Their ordinary weight is from three to five pounds, length fifteen inches, though some have been caught weighing eighteen pounds. They are beautiful fish, and, when first taken out of the water and struggle and flounder in the sun, they exhibit all the colors of the rainbow, but they soon expire, and when dead they are of a delicate white color. The trout, pike and muscalonge devour them without mercy. Some of these voracious kinds have been caught with the remains of six white fish in them.

The Detroit River white fish are more juicy and better flavored than those caught in the upper lakes, probably from the fact that they feed on more delicate food, but those found in Lake Superior surpasses all others in size. They were once so numerous that eight thousand were taken at a single haul. At present a haul of one or two thousand is thought a very good one. In all the rivers they are growing scarce very gradually but surely. The ratio of decrease cannot be arrived at with any degree of precision. A few years ago they were mostly taken with gill nets, and when they fell off in one place a corresponding increase would be found in another. Now they are taken with trap nets along the shore. The trap nets are a decided advantage over gill nets. They allow the fish to be kept alive, and they are taken out at leisure; they are therefore of better quality.

PICKEREL.—This variety is also held in high esteem. They are good either fresh, or salted and dried, and for packing rank next in value to white, although held nominally at the same price as trout when packed. They generally run up the rivers and lakes in the spring to spawn, where they are caught in considerable numbers. Average weight, 2 pounds; large, 10 pounds; common length, 15 inches.

LAKE OR MACKINAC TROUT.—This species are as voracious as pickerel. They are chiefly caught in Lake Huron with gill nets and hooks. Saginaw Bay appears to be a favorite resort with them. Some winters large quantities are caught in the Bay through the ice, with a decoy fish and spear. They spawn in the fall, generally in the bays and inlets. Average weight, 5 pounds; large, 75 pounds.

SISCOWIT.—These are mostly found in Lake Superior, and are preferred by some to any other kind. They are of the trout family, and for fat are unequalled; they are mostly taken in gill nets. They spawn in the fall, and are very superior for packing. They are also of some value for their oil. Common weight, 4 pounds; length, 16 inches.

LARGE HERRING.—These are very good fish, found only in the Straits and large lakes. They spawn in the fall; but few are caught. Average weight, 1½ pounds; common length, 10 inches.

In addition to the above, the muscalonge—a large and delicious variety—black and white bass, rock bass, perch, sturgeon, and at least twenty other kinds, abound in our waters, a minute description of which we are compelled to forego.

White fish are taken both spring and fall, chiefly the latter; spring is the season for pickerel; trout is taken at all seasons.

Something over a year since, some excitement was occasioned by a mode of fishing adopted by a party of fishermen on Detroit River, who stationed nets over a mile and a half in extent across the mouth of the stream, a proceeding that was not only calculated to destroy the value of the seine fisheries above, but which would ultimately have driven the fish out of the river altogether. A formidable opposition was, of course, arrayed against this unusual and unwarrantable proceeding, and the party found it expedient to desist, but the Legislature, which met shortly after, failed to pass an inhibitive measure. This action, or rather want of action, would have been considered extraordinary in a State less favored by nature.

We have fortunately been able to procure estimates of the amount of the catch at all the fisheries, together with other leading statistics; and with the view of imparting to the subject a more general interest, we include two or three points beyond the limits of the State. The estimates are furnished by a gentleman of intelligence and experience, and may be relied on as substantially correct:

Sandusky fisheries, catch mostly sold:

White fish, valuation.....	$50,000		Value of seines and fixtures.....	16,000
Pickerel, bass, &c.....	40,000		Paid for wages.....	37,000

Valuation.....	$8,000
Green Bay in Wisconsin, 2,500 bbls. white, and 500 bbls. all pickerel, packed :
Valuation.....	$25,000

Of the catch of Lake Huron, only an inconsiderable amount are sold fresh. On Detroit River, about 4,000 bbls. were packed last year.

Having secured specific information of the cost of outfit and amount paid for wages at the Sauble fisheries, we have taken such expenditures as the basis for those of all the upper lake fisheries in proportion to the catch, which, in the main, will doubtless prove substantially correct. At au Sauble last season there were sixteen boats employed for two months, and eight for the rest of the season. The value of the boats was $200 each, and the nets, &c., cost an additional sum of $600 for each, making the aggregate value of the boats and their outfit about $13,000. About forty men were employed on an average during the season, receiving a probable aggregate of $7,000 for wages. Taking these outlays, &c., as a fair average, and we have the following result:

From Port Huron to the Beavers, inclusive, together with Green Bay in Michigan, and the Saut Islands:

Cost of outfit.....	$83,500	Average number of men.....	300
Amount paid for wages.....	45,000

The amount shipped from Lake Superior, as appears from the report of the Superintendent of the Saut Canal, is 4,000 bbls. This is probably not a tithe of what might be done. The mouth of almost every stream in that region affords good fishing grounds, which is also true of most of the islands, particularly Isle Royale, where the Siscowit is very abundant.

The fisheries on the east coast of Lake Michigan have, for about six years past, increased very rapidly in importance, some years gaining 100 per cent. on the year preceding. A few years since a party of Norwegians came on and embarked in the business, which they have prosecuted ever since with advantage and profit. Trained in the severe school of their rugged northern home, they exhibit the greatest daring, going out in their tiny craft during the heaviest gales. They frequently venture out twenty-five miles from shore, almost meeting their countrymen from the Wisconsin side of the lake, who are engaged in the same hazardous calling. We have the following returns:

Little Traverse, 600 barrels:

—Showing an aggregate of 21,000 barrels, of which 18,000 barrels are salted; valuation, $169,800; value of fixtures, $43,600; estimated amount paid for wages, $24,625.

The fishing grounds of Michigan City are almost entirely within our State. The number of barrels include those sold fresh as well as salted, there being a considerable quantity of the former, in some of the fisheries last named, Michigan City and New Buffalo especially, from whence they are sent packed in ice to the different towns in Michigan; also, to Lafayette and Indianapolis, Ind.; to Louisville, Ky.; to Cincinnati, and also to Chicago, where they are repacked in ice, and some of them find their way to St. Louis, Cairo, &c. From St. Joseph and Grand Haven there are large quantities sent fresh to Chicago and Milwaukee, where they are repacked in ice.

At a fair estimate for the few small fisheries on this coast, from which we have no returns, together with those on the west coast of Lake Michigan, they are worth at least $60,000, but we have no data by which to form an estimate of the proportion packed.

The number of men employed, and the consequent expense, varies according to the method employed. With seines, the occupation is very laborious, and requires a much stronger force than pound nets. One set of hands can manage a number of the latter. Some of the fisheries on Detroit and St. Clair Rivers use seines altogether, to draw which, horse power is brought into requisition in some cases. A double set of men are employed, working alternately day and night, and the exposure is a most disagreeable feature of the business, particularly in bad weather. The great bulk of the aggregate catch continues to be taken with seines or gill nets, but pound (or trap) nets are on the increase. They have been in use below Lake Huron more or less for the past four or five years, but it is only about two years since their introduction in the upper lakes. With these nets 100 barrels of white fish have been taken at a single haul. Of course, their general use must produce a material diminution in the supply.

The barrels for packing constitute no inconsiderable item of this vast and important trade. Their manufacture is a regular branch in Port Huron, but most of them are made by the fishermen when not engaged in their regular vocation. They are made at all the villages and fishing stations on Lake Huron, pine being generally easy of access. The barrels are worth $62\frac{1}{2}$ cents each; $\frac{1}{2}$ barrels, 50 cents. Over two-thirds of the packages used are halves, but our estimated totals of the catch represent wholes.

Formerly, the nets used also were made almost entirely by the fishermen, who usually procured the twine from Detroit. Latterly, many of them have been brought from Boston already made.

Salt is another large item. For packing and repacking, about one-fourth of a barrel is used to each barrel of fish. For the amount packed, therefore, in the fisheries we have described, about 20,000 barrels is used.

The catch at the Sauble and Thunder Bay showed a falling off last season, owing not to the want of fish, but to the weather. At those points they congregate only from October to the close, and the weather being rough last fall, the catch was comparatively light.

Mackinac has been famous as the greatest fishing point on the lakes. Gill nets are mostly in vogue. The work in that locality is mostly done by half-breeds, in the employ of the merchants, the latter furnishing the salt, and paying them in trade, of which the outfit generally constitutes a part. But, with the late general depression, prices declined some thirty or forty per cent., and consequently the business, previously quite lucrative, lost its attraction for the time being. The merchants advanced the means in summer and could not realize until the ensuing year. Small holders were obliged to sell, some of the time by forcing the market, and this added to the difficulty experienced by large holders in obtaining returns.

Last winter a great many fish remained over unsold, including part of the catch of 1859, owing to the general depression. Last spring, however, the market was quite buoyant, and owing to the moderate amount caught last fall, there is a fair prospect that the present stock will be insufficient to meet the demand, which is steadily on the increase. The supply will be good for some time to come, on account of the more general introduction of pound nets, but it must ultimately diminish for the same reason.

The following is a list of the ports from whence fish were received during the year, and the amount from each. To the receipts reported at the Custom House, we have added those by the steamer Columbia, which, as she does not go beyond the district, is not required to report:

Considerable quantities are loaded for Cleveland at Thunder Bay, and at other points, which are not entered at our Custom House. Formerly, many from Lake Huron and Mackinac, particularly the latter, were taken to Chicago, but that market now derives its supplies from grounds nearer home.

CITY OF DETROIT.

CHAPTER I.

Introductory remarks—Indian Village on the Detroit—La Salle ascends Detroit River—Hennepin's description of the country—Erection of Fort Joseph—English expeditions—Cadillac—Mackinac—Traffic in brandy—Jesuit Missionaries—Cadillac visits France.

THERE is, perhaps, no city in the United States, whose history is more pregnant with stirring and startling events, than that of Detroit, with one exception, the most important city in the Northwest. While Buffalo, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Chicago have attained their present magnitude within the memory of men still among us, Detroit can take a position, in point of age, with Boston, New York, and other sea-board cities of the Union. Sixty-two years before Laclède and Chouteau erected their cabins on the site of St. Louis, a mission was established and a fort erected at Detroit by its founder, ANTOINE DE LA MOTTE CADILLAC. Before Washington was born, considerable commerce was carried on here with the Indians, by the French traders and coureurs des bois, whose canoes covered the great lakes, as long ago as the days of Louis the Fourteenth. One hundred and sixty years ago, La Halle daily drew around him in his rude chapel at Detroit, the people of his own loved land, and the untutored nations of the New World, to listen to the word of redemption, and to join in the morning and evening chants of his Church. Over its walls floated for three score years, the fleur de lis of France, then the royal ensign of England occupied its place here for nearly twenty years, and both flags withstood desperate sieges by the Indians. The stars and stripes of our glorious Union were here lowered to the foe, through the treachery or cowardice of the commanding officer. No more disgraceful event than the surrender of Detroit in 1812, is recorded in our annals. In Septem ber 1813, the American flag again floated over the city, I trust never again to be removed.

The earliest authentic account we have of Detroit being visited by Europeans, occurs in Louis Hennepin's journal. A village of the Hurons, called Teuchsagrondiu, stood on the present site of the city, and had probably been visited as early as the middle of the seventeenth century by missionaries and voyageurs, but no settlement had been attempted. On the 10th day of August 1679, the gallant La Salle and his companions, on board the Griffin, reached the islands at the mouth of the "Detroit River. They were charmed with the scene, and Hennepin, the historian of the voyage, proposed that they should found a colony here. The suggestion, however, was not carried out at that time, La Salle's mind being entirely occupied by the glorious undertaking of exploring the Mississippi, to its mouth. Hennepin says:

"On the 10th, (of August, 1679) we came to an Anchor at the Mouth of the Streight, (Detroit) which runs from the Lake Huron into that of Erie. The 11th, we went further into the Streight, and passed between two small islands, which make one of the finest prospects in the world. This Streight is finer than that of Niagara, being thirty leagues long, and everywhere one league broad, except in the middle that it stretches itself, forming the Lake we have called St. Claire. The navigation is easie on both sides, the coast being low and even. It runs directly from North to South.

"The country between these two lakes is very well situated, and the soil is very fertile. The Banks of the Streight are vast Meadows, and the Prospect is terminated with some Hills covered with Vineyards, Trees bearing good Fruit, Groves and Forests, so well disposed, that one would think that Nature alone could not have made, without the Help of Art, so charming a prospect. That Country is stocked with Stags, Wild Goats and Bears, who are good for food, and not fierce as in other countries; some think they are better than our Pork. The Turkey Cocks and Swans are there also very common; and our Men brought several other beasts and birds, whose Names are unknown to us, but they are extraordinary relishing. The Forests are chiefly made up of Walnut trees, Chestnut trees, Plum trees and Pear trees, loaded with their own Fruit and Vines. There is also abundance of Timber fit for Building, so that those who shall be so happy as to inhabit that Noble Country cannot but remember with Gratitude those who have discovered the way, by venturing to sail upon an unknown Lake for above of one hundred Leagues."

The English of New York had their attention turned as early as 1683, to the importance of competing with the French for the fur trade of the Northwest by trading companies, which should reach the Ottawas, and other Algonquin tribes, through Lake Erie and the Detroit river. Deserters from the French army were employed to accompany the dreaded Iroquois on such an expedition, but nothing of importance was accomplished. It however, had the effect of at once arousing the vigilance of the Governor General of Canada, who, in November 1685, wrote to the Minister of Marine, suggesting that a post be erected on the Detroit, to prevent the English getting access to the upper lakes, and the rich fur trade of that region. In the summer of 1686, the Governor General, having received orders to that effect from France, directed M. du Lhut, who, with M. de la Durantaye, was in command in the Northwest, to choose an advantageous position on the Detroit, near Lake Erie, for a fort, to be garrisoned by a company of fifty men. In accordance with the instructions issued, the post was established near Port Huron, and named St. Joseph, and occupied the present site of Fort Gratiot. We have no authentic information as to the date when the temporary fort was abandoned, probably not until after the erection of Fort Pontchartrain.

In the year 1686, the English, who were determined to secure the Indian trade of the Northwest, planned another expedition to Mackinac. The Governor of New York issued a commission to Capt. Patrick McGregory, under date of December 1686. The expedition set out from Buffalo early in the spring of the year following. It was manned by about sixty Englishmen and a number of Indians, and divided into two divisions, each having a considerable supply of goods to exchange with the savages for furs. One division, consisting of twenty-nine whites and six Indians, was captured by M. de la Durantaye of Mackinac, after it had entered Lake Huron. The other division was captured by M. du Lhut, commandant of Fort St. Joseph, near his post. The prisoners were sent to Montreal, and a French deserter, found among them was executed. Thus terminated the attempts of the English to secure the Indian fur trade by entering French territory, but great efforts were made to draw the trade to Albany and New York, by the inducements of high prices for furs, and low prices for "fire-water," that terrible scourge of the red man, and the chief cause of his degradation and misery. These allurements were not without their effect upon the tribes of the Northwest, and that effect was heightened by Iroquois influence in the English interest. It was to prevent this, by obtaining complete command of the channel of communication between the Iroquois and English and the upper lakes, that the King of France commanded Antoine de la Motte Cadillac, to establish a permanent post upon the Detroit River.

M. Cadillac was a native of Gascony, and had served in the French army in the Old World, before going, when quite young, to Arcadia, where he greatly distinguished himself. On the breaking out of the war between France and England in 1689, he was ordered to Versailles, for the purpose of giving the Court information in regard to the condition of the colonies, and especially in relation to the harbors and defenses on the coast, with which he was well acquainted. In 1694, Cadillac, or De la Motte, as he was usually called, was appointed to the command of Mackinac, with the exception of Montreal and Quebec, the most important post in Canada.

From the foundation of the French colonies among the Indians, the sale of "fire-water" was one of the greatest sources of gain among the traders, and its fruits of misery and woe among the poor red men, were soon apparent. The French missionaries who witnessed its terrible effects, began, at an early day, a vigorous war upon the liquor traffic with the Indians, and with all the energy of their characters, threw themselves into the conflict. Like a noble Bishop of another church, now laboring among the tribes of Minnesota, they placed themselves between the savages and their deadliest foe, and invoked in this holy warfare, not only the aid of convincing argument, but the authority of the Church, and the assistance of the Government. As the result of the long continued representation of its pernicious effects, which these devoted and pious priests persevered in making for more than half a century, the king and bishops at last questioned the propriety of allowing brandy and other intoxicating drinks to be exported to Mackinac as an article of traffic. After much discussion, the subject was, in 1694, referred to the Sorbonne for decision, and upon mature deliberation, this body decided against its sale to the savages. The king immediately issued an ordinance prohibiting the transportation of brandy to Mackinac, as an article of traffic. Its publication and enforcement produced an intense excitement among the Indians, and the French themselves, submitted with a very bad grace. The coureurs du bois were indignant, but helpless. Cadillac, who took command of the post soon after the edict was issued, was bitterly opposed to it, and used every argument and exertion against it. This brought him in conflict with the Jesuits, and from that date there sprang up a bitterness of feeling between them, that continued during his whole career in the North west—an enmity that interfered and even defeated the consummation of his dearest hopes and projects. In the following letter, written to a companion in arms at Quebec, the stout old soldier gives an interesting description of Mackinac, and sets forth various arguments against the King's ordinance, concerning the traffic in brandy :

“ FORT BUADÉ, MICHILIMACKINAC, August 3, 1695.

“ MONSIEUR :—You already know, without doubt, that Count Frontenac appointed me, last year, to the command of this country, in the place of M. Louvigny ; and that the convoy which I conducted revolted, the season being bad, and very far advanced.

“ My departure was on the 24th of September, and I could only go twenty-five leagues in twelve days, on account of the continued rains and contrary winds that prevailed. I did all I could to encourage the voyageurs to proceed on the journey, but to no purpose ; and, not knowing what else to do, I took the resolution to send them back, in good condition—foreseeing that they would not fail to go, even without my permission. I was not sorry afterward that I resolved upon this course, though the remainder of the journey seemed frightful, on account of the quantities of floating ice in the large lakes which we must cross. However, I decided without hesitation, to accomplish the journey, or perish by the way. Accordingly, I made choice of five of the most vigorous men in the convoy, and two savages ; and taking only sufficient food for two months, I continued my journey, and at length reached my destination.

“ I immediately found myself in circumstances of great embarrassment, in consequence of the departure of the convoy that goes down to Montreal yearly, and by the arrival of the one that comes from that place. This post is the rendezvous of the chiefs of all the nations in the surrounding country, and I was obliged to be in their councils to decide all their different propositions. These circumstances caused me so great heaviness, that I sought relief by fully informing Count Frontenac of affairs here, and you, without doubt, have received better information from him than I could give, whatever care I might devote to the subject.

“ As there was a cessation of hostilities, on propositions of peace made by the Iroquois, with much apparent submission, it was necessary to make great efforts to induce all these nations to recommence the war, according to the orders I had received. Although there went out from here, and from the villages depending on this post, about eight or nine hundred men, in different parties, they only brought in fifty-six scalps, and made four prisoners, whom we burned, according to their custom, notwithstanding all the assurances the victims could give that a treaty of peace had already been made at Montreal.

“ As the Iroquois are not to be trusted, our allies were not disposed to believe the assurances of the prisoners, and finally subjected them to the usual treatment of those who fall alive into the hands of their enemies. There are several parties which have not yet returned ; if they bring any prisoners to me, I can assure you their fate will be no sweeter than that of the others.

“ From the orders he gave me, I am persuaded that the Count will prosecute the war with greater energy than ever before. Nor do I believe that in future he will be in a mood to listen to any propositions from the Iroquois, who have at last yielded to the powerful efforts made by the English to dissuade them from completing the treaty of peace for which they had been so very solicitous.

"I am fully persuaded of the necessity of taking Manathè. As long as that place stands, we shall never be masters of these nations. Experience has taught me, better than I had before known, that, so long as Manathè stands, occasions will always be found for its people to annoy us.

"In regard to the decision made by the court, concerning the transportation of liquors to this place, I am far from daring to disapprove of it; but nothing can induce me to be entirely silent on a subject involving so deeply the interest of the king.

"It is a great mistake, if people have an idea that this place is deserted; if it be possible that any are in this belief, I think it my duty to correct the erroneous impression. It is very important that you should know, in case you are not already informed, that this village is one of the largest in all Canada. There is a fine fort of pickets, and sixty houses, that form a street in a straight line. There is a garrison of well-disciplined, chosen soldiers, consisting of about two hundred men, the best formed and most athletic to be found in this New World; besides many other persons who are residents here during two or three months in the year. This being an indubitable fact, that this place should not be deprived of the privilege which His Majesty has accorded to all the other places and villages in Canada—the privilege of furnishing themselves with the necessary drinks for their use. If there are but few places which should enjoy this liberty, this would undoubtedly be one, as it is exposed to all kinds of fatigue. The situation of the place, and the food also, require it.

"The houses are arranged along the shore of this great Lake Huron, and fish and smoked meat constitute the principal food of the inhabitants, so that a drink of brandy, after the repast seems necessary to cook the bilious meats, and the crudities which they leave in the stomach. The air is penetrating and corrosive, and without the brandy that they use in the morning, sickness would be much more frequent.

"The villages of the savages, in which there are six or seven thousand souls, are about a pistol-shot distant from ours. All the lands are cleared for about three leagues around their village, and perfectly well cultivated. They produce a sufficient quantity of Indian corn for the use of both the French and savage inhabitants. The question is, then, what reason can there be for this prohibition of intoxicating drinks, in regard to the French who are here now, and who only go and come once a year? Are they not subjects of the king, even as others? In what country, then, or in what land, until now, have they taken from the French the right to use brandy, provided they did not become disorderly? And if, by chance, some should become so, the commandants know how to apply the remedy. They can imprison, fetter, and chastise disorderly persons here as well as elsewhere.

“ Now what reason can one assign that the savages should not drink brandy bought with their own money as well as we? Is it prohibited to prevent them from becoming intoxicated? or is it because the use of brandy reduces them to extreme misery—placing it out of their power to make war, by depriving them of clothing and arms? If such representations in regard to the Indians have been made to the Count, they are very false, as every one knows who is acquainted with the ways of the savage.

“ It is an undeniable fact, that the law strictly forbids any one to trade with the savages for their arms, under pain of a large pecuniary fine. As for their clothing, can any one assert that clothing is necessary for them when they go to war, since everybody knows that it is the custom of all the nations here, when they ‘go to eat their enemy on his own land,’* they go naked, and paint themselves black and red from head to foot, if they are rich enough to do it.

“ It is the custom, when the moment comes for their departure on war-like expeditions, for each warrior to dispose of all his clothing, making presents of the different articles to those who remain at home; and on their return, while they are singing their songs of war, of prowess, and of victory, it is permitted to each of them to gather all that belongs to him, such as guns, bows and arrows, kettles, and even all they can seize of the spoils of their enemies, which consist only of such articles as I have mentioned.

“ It is bad faith to represent to the Count, that the sale of brandy reduces the savage to a state of nudity, and by that means places it out of his power to make war; since he never goes to war in any other condition.

“ It is certain that the bravest of their warriors have never used more than half a pound of powder, and a pound of balls in one battle. Their manner is to fire three or four times, and when they have the advantage of their enemy, they rush upon him. They are very strong and quick, and as they never rally, their battles are soon ended.

“ Finally, this prohibiting the transportation of brandy to this place, has much discouraged the Frenchmen who are here, from trading in future. Ceasing to sell liquor to the savages has caused a universal commotion among all the nations, as will be seen by what took place here on the 21st of last March. All the chiefs, and a large number of the inhabitants of all the surrounding villages, assembled here, and addressed me as follows :

“ ‘ O chief, what evil have thy children done to thee, that thou shouldst treat them so badly? Those that came before thee were not so severe

* “ When the business is to declare war, in form, between two or three nations, the manner of expressing it is, to ‘ hang the kettle over the fire ;’ which has its origin, without doubt, in the barbarous custom of eating their prisoners, and those they have killed, after boiling them. They likewise say, simply, that ‘ they are going to eat such a nation,’ which signifies that they are going to make war against them in the most destructive and outrageous manner ; and indeed they seldom do otherwise. When they intend to engage an ally in the quarrel, they send him a porcelain or Wampum, which is a large shell, in order to invite him to drink the blood, or, as the terms made use of signify, the broth of the flesh of their enemies.”—Charlevoix.

upon us. It is not to quarrel with thee that we came here, it is only to know for what reason thou wishest to prevent us from drinking brandy. Thou shouldst look upon us as thy friends, and the brothers of the French, or else as thy enemies. If we are thy friends, leave us the liberty of drinking; our beaver is worth thy brandy, and the Master of Life gave us both to make us happy. If thou wish to treat us as thy enemies, or as thy slaves, do not be angry if we carry our beaver to Orange, or Cortland, where they will give us brandy, as much as we want.'

"This speech did not fail to embarrass me, and I thought best to make them the following answer:

"My children, I am a good father; I have a very tender heart, and I hear from afar the cries of my children. I do not wish to wrong you, still less to treat you as my enemies, or my slaves. Do not be angry if you have no brandy this year. The reason for it is, that the trees which produce it on the other side of the great water, have frozen this year, and the vessels only brought a very little, so that the French could scarcely have what they wanted for themselves. The frost that destroyed your corn this year, has also destroyed the fruit from which they make the liquor; it is to be hoped that next year you will not lack. Take courage, do not be disheartened; Onontio will send you a sufficient quantity to rejoice you.'

"They replied that they wished me to write to the governor-general, which I promised. Meanwhile, to show you that this people care only for the present, and never regard the future, I ought to tell you that on the 4th of July, twenty Hurons departed from here without the knowledge of any one, and have gone to the Iroquois to make negotiations of peace, in order to facilitate the passage to the English, where they can trade and get brandy.

"This is the effect produced by the bad counsel given to the Count; and, indeed, there is nothing more provoking than to witness the manifestation of a wish to take from a people not yet civilized, the rights they have enjoyed ever since they have known the French.

"It seems very strange that they should pretend that the savages would ruin themselves by drinking. The savage himself asks why they do not leave him in his beggary, his liberty, and his idleness; he was born in it, and he wishes to die in it—it is a life to which he has been accustomed since Adam. Do they wish him to build palaces, and ornament them with beautiful furniture? He would not exchange his wigwam, and the mat on which he camps like a monkey, for the Louvre!

"An attempt to overthrow the present state of affairs in this country, would only result in the ruin of commerce and the destruction of the colony.

"Perhaps it will be said that the sale of brandy makes the labors of the missionaries unfruitful. It is necessary to examine this proposition. If the missionaries labor only for the extension of commerce, pursuing the course they have hitherto, I agree to it; but, if it is the use of brandy that hinders the advancement of the cause of God, I deny it; for it is a fact which no one can deny, that there are a great number among the savages who never drink brandy, yet who are not, for that, better Christians.

“All the Sioux, the most numerous of all the tribes who inhabit the region along the shore of Lake Superior, do not even like the smell of brandy—are they more advanced in religion for that? They do not wish to hear the subject mentioned, and when the missionaries address them, they only laugh at the foolishness of preaching. Yet these priests boldly fling before the eyes of the Europeans, whole volumes filled with glowing descriptions of the conversion of souls by thousands, in this country, causing the poor missionaries from Europe to run to martyrdom, as flies to sugar and honey.

“I am an eye-witness to all that passes here, yet I do not believe I shall ever be in humor to write on this point.”

Cadillac continued in command at Mackinac until 1699, making while there, many permanent treaties of peace with the Indians, and greatly attaching many of the tribes to the French. In July 1700, four of their “upper nations,” sent envoys to the governor-general at Montreal, “to weep for the French who had died in the war,” between France and England.

Upon giving up the command of Mackinac, Cadillac proceeded to France. He was kindly received by the Count Pontchartrain, on presenting himself at Versailles, and the colonial minister listened attentively to the project of the self-appointed envoy. The following conversation, which Cadillac afterwards committed to writing, then took place :

Count. “What reasons have you for wishing to establish a fort on the Detroit ?

La Motte. “I have many ; the first, and perhaps most important object, would be to make it a permanent post, not subject to frequent changes as are many of the others. To effect this, it is only necessary to have a good number of the French, soldiers and traders, and to draw around it the tribes of friendly Indians, in order effectually to conquer the Iroquois, who, from all time, have ruined the colonies, and prevented the advancement of civilization.”

Count. “That would be well, if what you propose could be executed without great difficulty ; but it seems to me that, instead of fortifying the colony by this establishment, you will only weaken it.”

La Motte. “That would be true, if the Iroquois were the friends of the French inhabitants, but they are the enemies. The forces of the French are too much scattered ; they live too far apart. It is absolutely necessary to draw them together, because when it is desirable to attack the Iroquois in their villages, the French must make great movements, and march in large numbers, which causes the king very heavy expenses.

Often, the result of such a march consists in killing four or five unhappy wretches, because great movements cannot be made without noise, and without the savages knowing it. They retire into the woods when their forces are inferior, and by this means render useless the expense and preparation of the French."

Count. "I see that you are right, since the great enterprises which have been undertaken in Canada, and even the general movements of the whole colony have been unsuccessful, having done no other harm to the Iroquois than merely pillaging their grain, which they had left to pursue the chase along the Detroit; and their game has furnished them subsistence till the following harvest. I see that you will tell me, if Detroit were fortified with a good number of French and savages, they would deprive the Iroquois of the resources of the chase; and by the continual incursions they would make upon them, on account of the proximity of the post, the Iroquois would be reduced to the last extremity, and often perish with hunger."

La Motte. "Sir, your penetration has anticipated my speech; I am persuaded that when you have heard the other reasons for this establishment, you will be still more deeply convinced of the necessity for it. It is incontestible that all the waters of the great lakes pass through this strait, and this is the only practicable path by which the English can carry on their trade with the savage nations, which have correspondence with the French. The English use every possible means to obtain trade, but, if that post were fortified in form, the English would entirely abandon the hope of depriving us of its advantages."

Count. "I understand what you intend; your design is good. You would deprive the enemies of the state, of the means of prosecuting the fur-trade in that country; but how will you prevent the savages from going to them, if they wish, and if they are drawn by the advantageous price of goods?"

La Motte. "I confess that is a great attraction for them; but experience shows us that although the savages in the neighborhood of Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal, are perfectly well informed that their furs sell better with the English, and that they can obtain goods at a lower price, yet they make all their trade with us. There are many reasons for this. One is, that each savage, one with another, kills, per year, only fifty or sixty beavers, and as he is neighbor to the Frenchman, frequently borrows of him, paying in proportion to his returns by the chase. With the little that remains to him, he is compelled to make purchases for his family. Thus he finds himself unable to go to the English, because his remaining goods are not worth the trouble of carrying so far, not being sufficient to pay him for the expense of his journey. Another reason is, that in frequenting the French he receives many caresses; they are too cunning to allow his furs to escape, especially when they succeed in making him eat and drink with them.

"The will to go to the English, still exists among the savages, but they are skillfully reduced to the impossibility of its execution. If Detroit is not established, sir, we shall soon see all the savages of the country going to the English, or inviting them to come and establish themselves in the Indian country."

Count. "Have you not still other reasons?"

La Motte. "One cannot deny that our savages have hitherto hunted north of Lake St. Clair, but by this establishment, they would pursue the chase as far as two hundred leagues south of Lake Erie, toward the sea. Consequently, these furs that make the greater part of the trade of the English, by means of their savages, would be conveyed by ours into the French colony, and make a very considerable increase in its commerce.

Count. "What furs are there in that country?"

La Motte. "The skins of the stag, deer, elk, roebuck, black bear and buffalo, with wolf, otter, wild-cat, beaver, and other small furs.

Count. "Are those larger skins worth money, and do the traders find sale for them? Could we not find means to occupy the savages in the pursuit of these animals, and cause them to abandon that of the beaver, which is now prohibited merchandise? The vast accumulation of beaver fur is becoming burdensome to France.

La Motte. "Those skins are actually in favor; the skins of the deer and the stag are worth sixteen francs a-piece; those of the elk, twenty francs; the black bear, ten francs; the roebuck, five francs; and the rest in proportion; therefore, it is certain that we could easily occupy the savages in this pursuit, provided we furnish them with goods to the value of their peltry. This would be an unfailing means of making sale for the beaver in the kingdom, since, instead of one hundred and thirty thousand now received every year at the storehouse in Quebec, there would be but about seventy thousand, which would be a large yearly diminution. I do not include the inferior beaver of Canada.

Count. "You have given many excellent reasons, the means of humbling the Iroquois, and causing them to respect the French; the exclusion of the English commerce and consequent French domination, and their increased profit by trading for different furs. It is absolutely necessary to establish this post.

"If the king approves this project, I will give you two hundred chosen men, of different trades, with six companies of soldiers, in order that the place may be in a condition to hold the Iroquois in subjection in time of peace, and to destroy them if they wish for war; and particularly, that our allies may be secure under this protection. Therefore, prepare yourself to return to Canada, and commence the establishment of Detroit.

La Motte. "I will go, since you command me, but I shall find many difficulties to overcome in the accomplishment of this enterprise, as the Jesuits of that country are, personally, my enemies.

Count. "Only go, do not place yourself in difficulty; vigorously prosecute this affair, and if you find obstacles which prevent your success, you have only to return and render me an account of them."

After some time had elapsed, Cadillac was summoned into the presence of Count Pontchartrain, and their conversation was renewed in the following words :

Count. "The king has examined your project, and has given me orders to send you back without delay, to take prompt possession of Detroit, wishing you to command there until further orders. You will therefore depart immediately for Rochefort, whence you will embark."

La Motte. "Pardon me, sir, but I beg you will take into consideration the expense of the two painful voyages I have already made, which have exhausted my own purse and the liberality of my friends; also the expenditures I shall be obliged to make in perfecting this establishment."

Count. "I will take care of you, only pursue such a course as will insure you success."

La Motte. "Provided I am supported by the honor of your protection, I am sure of perfecting this work."

CHAPTER II.

Cadillac Reaches Canada—Preparations—Arrives at Detroit—Builds Fort Pontchartrain—Description of the Fort—Its Object—Company of the Colony of Canada—Their Contract—Traffic in Brandy—Trouble with the Jesuits—The Indians—Cadillac's Letter to Count Pontchartrain.

IN accordance with the intentions of Count Pontchartrain, Cadillac embarked for Canada, and arrived in Quebec on the 8th of March, 1701, bringing with him a commission as Commandant of the post to be erected, and a grant from Louis XIV. of a tract of land, fifteen acres square, "wherever on the Detroit the new fort should be established." From Quebec, Cadillac proceeded to Montreal, where he immediately began the necessary preparations for his expedition. At length, on the 5th of June, everything being in readiness, he left La Chine, near Montreal, for Detroit, accompanied by fifty soldiers and fifty Canadian artizans and traders. His officers were M. de Tonti as Captain, and Messrs. Dugal and Chacornacle, as Lieutenants. A Rêcollet priest accompanied the troops as Chaplain, and Father Valliant, a Jesuit, joined the expedition, as a missionary to the Indians. Against the wishes of Cadillac, but, in obedience to the command of the Governor General, he took the old route by the Ottawa and Lakes Nippissing and Huron, arriving in Detroit on the 24th of July, 1701.

Fort Pontchartrain, so named in honor of the Colonial Minister of France, consisted of a simple stockade of strong wooden pickets, about twelve feet in height, enclosing a space of but little more than an acre of ground. At each angle were wooden bastions, only two of which seem to have been serviceable, according to M. D'Argrement, who says: "There are two bastions, so small and of such irregular figure as to be of little use." The fort was protected by a number of cannon, which were, however, better adapted to overawe the Indians, than for effective service against them or the English. Within the enclosure were erected about a dozen small log cabins, the roofs of which were thatched with grass. The Post occupied the ground where now stand the "Cooper Block," and the Farmers' and Mechanics' and Peninsular Banks, extending west a little below the Michigan Exchange, thence running south to Woodbridge street, which was then near the margin of the river, thence east and north to the place of beginning. The above, with a few wigwams of the Huron's, represents Detroit as it existed one hundred and sixty-one years ago. The Detroit of 1862, with its seventy-five thousand inhabitants, its noble warehouses and palatial residences, presents a widely different spectacle.

The principal object of the establishment at Detroit being to secure to France the immense fur trade, the Colonial Government at once made such arrangements as would but promote that object and at the same time guard against frauds or oppression on the part of the military or traders, at a point so far distant from the seat of government. Accordingly, a company was formed by the merchants interested in the trade at Forts Frontenac and Pontchartrain, known as the "Company of the Colony of Canada," and the following contract was duly confirmed at Quebec, October 31, 1701:

"COMPANY OF THE COLONY OF CANADA.

"Contract made with the Company of the Colony of Canada concerning Forts Frontenac and Detroit, to enable said Company to traffic for beaver and other peltries, in conformity to the agreement made in a convention held at Quebec, October 31st, 1701.

"Before the royal notaries, at Quebec, in New France, appeared M. le Chevalier Callieres, lieutenant-general for the king in this country of New France, and Monsieur Champigny, administrator of justice, police, and revenue of the said country, who testify that, in consequence of orders which they have this year received from his Majesty, to intrust to the Company of the Colony of this said country the posts of Detroit and Fort Frontenac, there was held at the Chateau St. Louis, in this city, on the eighth of the present month, a general assembly of all the inhabitants of this country who have a deliberate voice in the said Company, that all the arrangements might be made in their presence, if the Company should decide to accept the said posts of Detroit and Fort Frontenac.

“There were present at this assembly the seven directors-general of the said Company, the governors of Montreal and Three Rivers, many civil and military officers, and the merchants and other inhabitants interested in the Company.

“After mature deliberation, the result was declared to be the acceptance of these posts by the Company, for the purpose of trade in beaver and other peltries, to the entire exclusion of all private individuals, who are now, or may hereafter become, residents of that country; and that the act of said acceptance shall be passed between the governor-general and his intendant, and the directors-general of the said Company.

“In consequence of said decision, the following articles of agreement have been made between the governor-general and intendant on the one part, and Messrs. d'Auteuil, procureur-general of the king in the sovereign council of this country, Lotbinieres, lieutenant-general of this city of Quebec, Irazeur, Gobin, Macart, and Pierre, gentlemen, merchants of this city of Quebec, all directors-general of the said Company, on the other part.

“Be it known, that the governor-general and intendant, in consequence of the express orders which they have this year received from the king, do, by these presents and acceptances, in the name of his Majesty, cede and convey to the directors of the said Company of the Colony the said posts of Detroit and Fort Frontenac, giving into the possession of the said Company of the Colony, from this day forth, the said posts in the state in which they now are, for their use, to traffic in furs, to the exclusion of all other inhabitants of said country, so long as it shall please his Majesty.

“It shall be the duty of the said Company to complete the construction of the fort at Detroit, and the buildings properly belonging thereto; and the Company shall in future keep said fort and buildings in good repair, that they may be maintained and rendered in the same state in which they are now, and better, if possible, whenever his Majesty shall see proper to receive them, if in the course of time he so order.

“The Company of the Colony is also to take charge of the goods which have been sent to the said place, obeying the conditions that have been agreed upon—Messrs. Radisson and Arnault to be overseers of the storehouse of the said goods which the intendant has placed in the hands of the directors of the Company. They are also to have charge of the other advances made by the king for this establishment, and to make payment for the said goods, and advances to the intendant from the first bills which shall be returned from Detroit; and in case said bills should not be sufficient, on the first of October, 1702, the said overseers shall give bills of exchange for the remainder, which shall be drawn upon the directors and commissioners of said Company in Paris, payable to the securities and overseers of the storehouses, for the purposes of liquidating the claims against the said Company, conformably to the agreement made with the said lord-lieutenant.

“ The intendant shall deduct from the amount due, six thousand livres, French money, being the gift ordered by his Majesty for the support of honest families in this country who may need assistance.

“ The payment of the said sum of six thousand livres shall be made by the said Company every year, on the said first of October, so long as it shall enjoy the commerce of the said post of Detroit.

“ It is also agreed that the king shall support, at his expense, the garrison which the governor shall order for the protection of the said fort of Detroit, and that the commandant and one other officer only, shall be maintained by the Company.

“ The said commandant and soldiers shall not make any trade for furs with the savages nor French, directly nor indirectly, under any pretext whatever, under pain of confiscation of the said furs, and other punishment prescribed by the king.

“ Moreover, the said Company binds itself to cause to be conveyed from Montreal to Detroit, at its own expense, the provisions and other articles which his Majesty shall furnish to the said garrison, with the help of fifteen livres per hundred weight, which the intendant shall cause to be paid from the treasury of his Majesty to the Company.

“ In regard to Fort Frontenac, it will remain as it now is, fully and entirely at the disposal of his Majesty, unless the Company can advance some better claim than that of placing deputies there to make commerce in furs for their profit, to the exclusion of all others.

“ Until his Majesty's orders shall be received, the deputies shall be lodged, and their goods stored, in the storehouse of the fort, as the magazine guard and the goods of the king have been heretofore.

“ There shall be made an inventory of all the effects which shall be found at the said fort, for the commerce of the said place, after the return of the last convoy for this year, which effects shall remain for the Company, who shall be bound to pay for them at the price expressed in the invoice and statement which is in the hands of the intendant. The said amount to be paid during the year 1702, from the returns of the commerce; and, in case that the said returns shall not be sufficient, the balance shall be paid in bills of exchange, which shall be drawn upon the said commissioners of said Company, and its director in Paris.

“ The said Company shall be required to pay the sum of seven livres and ten sous, French money, per hundred weight, for the transportation of effects from Montreal to the said fort; and the said Company enjoying, as hereinbefore stated, the privilege of trading for furs at the said place of Fort Frontenac, exclusive of all others, will be required to transport to the said Fort Frontenac the articles necessary for the subsistence of the garrison of the said place, conformably to the orders of the king, contained in his dispatches of the present year. The commandant, officers, and soldiers which the governor-general shall hold there in garrison, shall make no trade, directly or indirectly, on pain of confiscation of their furs, and other punishments prescribed by the laws of the king, until the agreement be revoked.

"Executed and conveyed at Quebec, Chateau St. Louis, in the forenoon of the thirty-first day of October, 1701, the said gentlemen interested and the notories having signed at the time, the agreements remaining in the office of M. de Chamblon, one of the notaries."

Cadillac was greatly chagrined by the entire monopoly of the trade granted to the "Company of the Colony," the directors of which were Jesuits, and his bitter enemies. It was at their solicitation that the Governor General appointed Father Viallant to accompany Cadillac's expedition, which he was almost successful in breaking up before their arrival at Detroit. Cadillac was a zealous Catholic, but he was a Franciscan, and entertained a hearty hatred for the Jesuits. This fact was well known by his public and private correspondence. What other causes existed for Cadillac's hatred towards that powerful organization, in addition to their action in regard to the traffic in brandy, we are, as Lear says, mainly ignorant, but the feud between them was bitter and unextinguishable. Those devoted and pious Jesuit missionaries who first carried Christianity into the region of the Great Lakes, the golden age of Jesuitism, when Brebeuf, Dablon, Marquette, and Allouez preached the Word of Salvation to the savages, the Western World, had passed away, and been succeeded by a worldly era, where ambition took the place of piety and devotion to the good work. So great had been the change, that an opposition to the order had sprung up within the church itself, which culminated in the abolition of the order by the Pope.

The post at Detroit, from the very first, had many difficulties to contend with, chief among which was the implacable hatred of this unscrupulous order. The Jesuits looked upon the Indian tribes as their peculiar inheritance, and they could brook no interference with them, or any effort for their control from which they were excluded. This powerful body lost no opportunity of thwarting the commandant's plans, and many of the difficulties which subsequently arose in the Colony are clearly traceable to their enmity. Cadillac was also unfortunate in having the settled and almost fatal opposition of the Governor General of Canada. Unlike other posts, it was established by the direct command of Louis XIV. It was, therefore, in a measure independent of his authority, a fact eminently calculated to excite jealousy and opposition. Besides the theory of its establishment contemplated the partial, and ultimately entire, abandonment of Mackinac, as the tribes gathered there were to be induced to locate around Fort Pontchartrain. The immense fur trade that had passed from Mackinac to Montreal, and in which the Governor was largely interested, was to be transferred to Detroit.

Notwithstanding the persevering efforts of his powerful foes, the little Colony continued to grow in numbers and prosperity, under the leadership of the bold and kind-hearted Cadillac, who soon gathered around him several villages of Hurons, Ottawas, Pottawattamies, Miamis, and other tribes. The following letter, addressed to the Colonial Minister, gives a life-like picture of the early day of Detroit, and also details the future plans of the enterprising and chivalrous commandant :

“FORT PONTCHARTRIN, Aug. 31, 1703.

“MONSEIGNEUR:—I had the honor to write you, last year, a full account of the affairs at this post; and I write you again, not knowing what arrangements you have made concerning it.

“Doubtless you have noticed the regulations which were made by M. le Chevalier de Callieres, between Rev. Father Bouvert and myself, while I was at Quebec, and have supposed that all its stipulations were fulfilled on both sides.

“These regulations prove, with evidence, the opposition which the Jesuits in this country have raised against the settlement of the savages at this post; and I did hope that they would keep the promises which they made by public compact.

“You had the kindness to write me that the king wishes the savages to be served by the Father Jesuits; and that the Superior of Quebec would give me those who would enter into my plans better than did Father Viallant.

“One would suppose that your orders would have sufficed to engage the services of the Superior in providing for this mission immediately; especially when you had so kindly favored him by permitting Father Viallant to remain in this country after opposing, as he did, the intentions of his Majesty.

“The regulations of M. Callieres seem also to require him to provide for the missions, as it is clearly expressed there. Yet, you will see, till now, the Jesuits have done nothing towards executing the intentions of his Majesty, though you have plainly expressed them to M. de Callieres and the Superior of Quebec, and have also been pleased to inform me of them.

“I do not know whether you have been informed that, in consequence of these regulations, the Company of the Colony have agreed to pay to the missionaries on the Detroit, the yearly sum of eight hundred francs each, and furnish them with necessary food and clothing, to be transported to their stations at the expense of the company; lodging them in the villages of the savages until more commodious houses can be erected for them.

“I am satisfied, on my part, in regard to the measures they have taken; and the company seems satisfied on its own part, having this spring, in comformity to the regulations, sent an express canoe for Father Marest, Superior of Michilimackinac. He pretended to have very important reasons for not coming here; and the company incurred the expense of the voyage to no purpose, as they had before done for Father Viallant.

"You wished me to be a friend of the Jesuits, and to have no trouble with them. After much reflection, I have found only three ways in which this can be accomplished: the first is, to let them do as they please; the second, to do whatever they desire; and the third, to say nothing of what they do.

"If I let the Jesuits do what they please, the savages will not establish themselves at Detroit; nor would any of them ever settled here. If I do what they would desire, it will be necessary to have this post abandoned; and if I say nothing of what they do, it will only be necessary for me to pursue my present course. Notwithstanding this last essential point, I cannot yet engage them to be my friends.

"It is for you my lord, to say whether you wish me to continue to induce the savages to establish themselves here, that this post may be preserved and sustained with eclat. If these are your sentiments, as I believe they are, perhaps I am the proper person to carry your plans into execution. But, I dare say to you, that the opinions of the Jesuits in this country are totally opposed to yours, at least on this point.

"All these things have not prevented the Sautèurs and Mississagués from coming here again this year, to build a village on this river. By my advice, these two nations have united into one. I judged this proper, thinking their union would be better for themselves, and for us, if any rupture should occur between these colonies and their enemies.

"Thirty Hurons of Michilimackinac arrived here on the 28th of June, to unite themselves with those already established here. There remain only about twenty-five at Michilimackinac. Father Carheil, who is missionary there, remains always firm. I hope, this fall, to pluck out the last feather of his r'wing, and I am persuaded that that obstinate old priest will die in his parish, without having a single parishioner to bury him.

"Several small bands of the Miamias have established themselves here, and also a few of the Nepisserinieux; some have joined the Hurons, and others the Outawas, and the Oppenagos, or Loups.

"The remainder of the Outawa-Sinagos, who are still at Michilimackinac, have sent me a necklace, in secret, to tell me they will come to join their brothers at Detroit, after they have gathered in their harvest. Six wigwams of Kiskakons have sent me the same message. I have replied, by necklaces, that I was going to mark out the land where they could make their fields.

"This proceeding on the part of the savages, shows how much the Jesuits intimidate them, by causing the apprehension to creep into their minds that some bad trick will be played upon them if they come here.

"When it pleases you that I should make an entire reunion of our allies at this place, it will be very easy to accomplish it; though, on account of the extraordinary war of Canada, it will now be necessary to have about six thousand francs at my disposal, to be employed as I judge expedient, for the success of this enterprise; and of which I will give an exact account to M. de Callieres, and M. Beauharnais, the intendant.

"I have already had the honor to write you concerning the presents and necklaces which we give the savages. These are especially given to induce their transmigration, and are, to them, pledges of our fidelity to the promises we make them; and are titles which give them the right to possess, or abandon, as contracts do among civilized people.

"You know that, to this day, the company have not contributed a farthing for gifts, to put the savages in motion. It is true that they have placed in my hands a considerable stock of goods, to give an appearance of prosperity to this establishment, without cost to the king; and I believe they have reason to be satisfied with my management, since it is certain they have rather gained than lost. I am better informed concerning this than any one else; at any rate, if they complain of the expenses which it has been, or may be, necessary to incur to sustain this post, I willingly pledge myself to indemnify them, and to urge on affairs here as your Highness may desire.

"If you doubt it, I will, whenever you please, give you such proof, that I dare flatter myself you will fully believe my statement.

"If this portion of the country had not been excluded from commerce, it would have fortified itself.

"I think the shortest way by which I could inspire you with confidence, would be by actual service. Have the kindness to employ me in some enterprise, and sustain me with the honor of your protection; and if, in spite of all the malice and trickery of my enemies, I do not succeed, never use me again.

"My enemies are continually attempting to overthrow my plans, or at least to produce vexatious delays, by presenting numerous arguments against them, representing the obstacles to be insurmountable, while I am employed in proving the fallacy of their objections.

"I do not know that the trade in Buffalo-skins could be sustained, on account of the contempt in which they are held by the company. They do not pay the savages for them more than six francs apiece. This does not please the hunters, because a package of hides, weighing two hundred and fifty or three hundred pounds, must be transported from three to four leagues inland, which they find too much labor. They therefore prefer to employ themselves in hunting beavers and other animals, whose skins are lighter and easier to transport.

"If the company do not increase the price of Buffalo skins, I think the savages will follow this chase only at a time when they can obtain no other furs.

"We have found a mine of copper on Lake Huron, of which I send you a specimen, which seems to me very pure. I have sent as much to M. de Callieres, and to the directors of the company, in order that they may take measures to know if it is sufficiently abundant to induce them to make an enterprise of it. The conveniences would be great, as the boats, and even the vessels could go to the places where it is, not being very far distant from this post.

"If you will permit me to explore the mines in the neighborhood of the lakes and rivers, I will devote myself to the explorations, visiting the different localities in person, that you may be more certainly informed of the facts. I am not able to incur the expense, but will only ask permission to choose for this enterprise twelve capable men, in Canada, who shall have the liberty to carry goods to the amount of four hundred francs each, and no more, into the places which they shall visit. In conforming myself to your wishes, I will close the mouth of all my enemies. By this means, perhaps, there will remain to the envious, only the vexation of seeing me succeed.

"In any case, this attempt will cost nothing to the king, nor to the public; consequently, they will have little ground for complaint.

"Grand River, so-called, on Lake Erie, near the farther extremity, is about fifteen leagues from here; and along its shores, and extending into the depths of its forests, are great numbers of mulberry trees; the land is also perfectly good. If you will have the kindness to grant me six leagues on each side of the river, and as much in the forest, in title of marquisate, with the rights of hunting, fishing, and trade, I will undertake the cultivation of silk, by having people come from France who understand the business, and who will bring with them the necessary quantity of silkworms. Should you grant me this kindness, I will take measures to have them come by the first vessels, in order that they may arrive here before winter.

"As to trade, I will not make any till after the lease of the company expires.

"We have made a fine harvest this year, and have abundant supplies for a garrison of one hundred and fifty men, but I do not believe we shall be at that trouble, on account of the objections that are made to giving me soldiers.

"I have contented myself with asking for only fifty effective men; they left me but twenty-five, and I do not know as they will grant me even the additional twenty-five. I beg you to order M. de Callieres to grant me fifty more next year, that this garrison may be composed of one hundred effective men.

"This post should be equal to all emergencies, not only on account of our enemies, but also on account of our allies, whom it is necessary to hold in abeyance. It would be still better if you would send me some troops from France.

"The principal chief of the Hurons, who is very absolute in his nation, told me to write to you that he would be very glad to go to France, to assure his Majesty of his fidelity, and of his desire to engage in the French service. He proposes to form a company of fifty men, of his nation, provided the French will make him captain, and give him a lieutenant and ensign. He also requires that we should pay him and his soldiers, by the month, the same wages that the officers and soldiers of the army are paid in this country.

“There is another chief, of the same nation, who obligated himself to do the same thing. They beg of you also to give them a passage on a vessel, to visit the king. I believe they intend to have a hunting expedition for the purpose of obtaining furs for a present to yourself, as an expression of their good-will.

“The principal chief of the Outawas, who is one of the noblest looking men I have seen among all these nations, and who is Frenchified in his habits, requested me to write you, that he also is anxious to visit you, but his age will not permit him to take so long a journey. However, he will send his nephew, with another friend, to France, to offer his services to the king. If his Majesty wishes to incur the expense, I think it will be the best means by which to secure the entire subjection of these two nations.

“I think it would be necessary to spare these Indian soldiers a little in the beginning, and only oblige them to do military duty once a month, when they would be reviewed with the other troops. It might even be expedient to release them entirely from military duty for three months during the winter, when they are engaged in hunting; but it would be necessary to be very exact in paying these companies every month.

“The chiefs who propose to form these companies, wish to have standards and clothes like the other soldiers; and they hope you will also furnish them with arms. They have assured me that they would obey me in all things pertaining to the service of the king, and have also promised obedience to all others who are commissioned by him. I have fully explained to them how they must behave as soldiers, and especially that they would be expected to exercise a spirit of subordination. They expressed themselves satisfied with all my instructions.

“None need be astonished at their ready acquiescence, for all men, in whatever state they are born, lack neither vanity nor ambition; and there are always enough who are anxious to make themselves esteemed and renowned among their fellow-men.

“The chief of the Hurons is already so inflated by this proposition, that he has requested M. de Callieres to cause him to live in French fashion. I received an order, when in Quebec, to build him a house of oak, forty feet long, and twenty-four feet wide. This house is delightfully situated on the margin of the river; it stands on a little eminence, and overlooks the village of the Hurons. His example has induced the chief of the Outawas to go to Montreal, to ask the same favor of M. de Callieres. He has not yet returned, but, without doubt, his request will be granted.

“You will perceive, by what I have written, that my plans seem to be working well. My opinion is, that these things are the most sure to render this people permanently subject to the king, and afterward to make them Christians. These projects will have a better effect than the preaching of the missionaries, since it is certain that they do not make any progress, and that all the good they do, is that which arises from the baptism of those children who die after they have received it.

“Permit me to insist upon the great necessity there is for the establishment of a seminary at this place, for the instruction of the children of the savages with those of the French—instructing them in piety, and, at the same time, teaching them our language.

“The savages, being naturally proud, seeing their children placed among ours, would dress them in the same manner, and make their attendance at the seminary a point of honor. It is true that it would be necessary, at first, to allow these little savages great liberty, and only confine ourselves to the design of civilizing them, and rendering them capable of receiving instruction, and leave the rest to Him who made the heart.

“This expense would not be very great; I believe if his Majesty would grant a thousand crowns to the seminary at Quebec, that institution would commence this pious and holy work. Those gentlemen are so full of zeal for the service of God, and of charity for all that regards the subjects of the king in this colony, that we cannot help admiring them. All the country is under inexpressible obligations to them for the good education they give the youth, together with their good example and doctrine. It is these efforts which have produced very good subjects in the service of the Church in New France.

“I think you cannot commence this work too soon, and, if you object to it on account of the expenses which may arise afterward, I pledge myself to raise, in this country, the amount necessary to continue to the savages this gratification, without any farther cost to the king.

“There is no reason to fear that savages will be wanting to do the hunting necessary to supply beaver and other furs. There are many nations in the vicinity of the lakes, and in the depths of the immense forests, who will never, perhaps, be reached by civilization, quite sufficient to kill all the animals whose furs are useful in trade.

“If these nations immediately around us are brought into subjection to the service of the king, in the manner I have proposed, it would not prevent them from doing their hunting at the proper time. These things will only bring them into a state to be Frenchified, and enable them to take arms in the service of the king, when he shall need them.

“One can easily perceive that if the savages were to-day upon the proposed footing, it would be of great value to the colony; since it is certain that, at the first beat of the drum, we could place under arms those savages who are disciplined, and their example would easily attract all the rest to follow them, and do like them. Thus, in the present war, these people, if united with us, would make incursions and terrible inundations upon the English colonies. Instead of that, they are divided among themselves, and are content to us do, while we are only too happy if we can continue to hold them in that state.

“I foresee that there will be many objections to the plans which I have the honor to lay before you. I cannot prevent them, but can only assure you that the plans shall succeed if you wish.

“To come to the point, it will be necessary for you to send good orders, very decisive and exact, and to speak a little with the great teeth.

“If these plans were proposed by some one who has the protection of the Jesuits, they would have an excellent relish for them, and nothing would appear more easy to be put in execution. But, because I have not consulted them, or rather, because I have not been disposed to allow myself to be treated as a slave, as some of my predecessors were, who commanded in this country, they represent as impossible every thing that I propose. It seems to me, nevertheless, that if the Count would pay attention to these plans which I have the honor to present, and of which M. de la Touche is well-informed, it could be clearly seen whether I reason wisely or extravagantly.

“I will not repeat the different designs I have presented to the Count, I will only speak of Detroit. When I had the honor to present my memorial to you, remember, if you please, what trouble there was on account of the too great quantity of beaver, for which they could not find sale in France. The old traders complained that, on this account, they would not be able to sustain their lease. I mentioned this in my memorial, asking for the establishment of Detroit, and pledged myself to employ the savages in hunting other animals, such as the deer, the wild goat, the Canadian elk, the roebuck, the black bear, and the wolfe, together with the lynx, otter, pecquans, and other small furs, for three years, without hunting the beaver, in order that they might, by this means, have time to sell a considerable quantity of the furs already amassed. I have so far executed what I promised, that there have been sent out from Detroit only about eight thousand beaver skins in three years; and the surplus trade has been of large skins and small furs. The books of the company show that this fact is indisputable.

“The second design that I had in projecting this establishment, was not so much to have another post for commerce, as to afford protection to commerce; since from this place we can go by canoe to all the nations that are around the lakes. It is a door by which one can go in and out, to trade with all our allies.

“I confess that to give success to this establishment, it will be necessary to make it a substantial post; to keep here a good garrison; to give the liberty to settle here, and not to allow any other establishment in the upper country.

“As several of the soldiers desire to establish themselves in this place, and for this purpose have asked of me grants of land, have the kindness to inform if you wish me to comply with their request. They would take the confirmation of the grant from M. de Callieres and M. de Beauharnais.

“Do you wish the soldiers to marry here, when they shall be in a condition to support a family? I think it would be policy to settle a certain number of them every year.

“Be pleased also to inform me if you wish dwelling-places granted to the Canadians: there are several who persecute me continually for them.

“It is for you to speak decidedly on this point, for I cannot conceal from you that the company do not wish to do any thing about it. They pretend that this emigration would weaken the posts on this side of Quebec and Montreal. As for me, I do not believe that forty or fifty men, more or less, in those larger places, would make much difference, or prevent the execution of any of their projects, while at this post they would, without doubt, be a great assistance. Nothing can ever be accomplished here without more inhabitants. Our allies, who are already established here, and those who are on the way, would soon consider it a bad omen, and draw vexatious inferences concerning the faithfulness of our promises, as we have told them this should be a very considerable establishment.

"Perhaps you are already aware that there are no French settlements in this country, even to the habitation of M. Juchereau,* where there are not Jesuits. Detroit is the only exception. As they express so much earnest zeal in serving the missions, this fact shows the good-will they have toward me. As they trouble themselves so much with my affairs, I do not desire to see them here; yet they should choose for themselves, and make known their decision, that measures might be taken to have other missionaries come.

"It is proper that you should be informed that more than fifty years since, the Iroquois, by force of arms, drove away nearly all of the other Indian nations from this region to the farther extremity of Lake Superior—a country five hundred leagues north of this post, and frightfully barren and inhospitable. About thirty-two years ago, these exiled tribes collected themselves together at Michilimackinac, which is also an ungrateful land. There they were obliged to live principally upon fish, in the manner that I explained to you in a statement which I made when in France, and with which you had the kindness to tell me you were well satisfied.

"It seems that God has raised me as another Moses to go and deliver this people from captivity, or rather as Caleb, to bring them back to the country of their fathers, to their ancient dwelling-place, of which there remained to them but a faint idea.

"Meanwhile, Montreal plays the part of Pharaoh; he cannot see this emigration without trembling, and arms himself to destroy it. But I hope the Count, noticing that he is a ferocious beast without a guide, and without light, will smooth my path, and break through the impediments only to inundate and submerge those who have the rashness to desire the overthrow of a design so just.

"The people of Montreal do not know what they ask. They have broken the scepter of their first king, who is God himself. They wished to reject, and even stone Him, who caused exquisite food to be rained upon the most ungrateful lands, and broke the rocks to satisfy their thirst.

"Of what do they complain, since the post of Detroit is established in an abandoned country, which has long remained in the possession of the Iroquois and the wolves?

*The trading-house of Mons. Juchereau was most probably upon the site now occupied by the city of Chicago.

“The Iroquois pursued the chase in all that region, and brought the beaver and small furs to the English. This is an indubitable fact, and one must be full of stubbornness to dispute it. I have, therefore, taken the right time to commence this establishment. The Iroquois have entirely withdrawn, or if any remain, they are intermingled with our allies. All the hunting is done by our savages, and all the trade returns to us. It is, then, a benefit to the kingdom of France, and a source of profit which we have torn from England.

“Individuals have complained that the Company of the Colony have the sole profit. I do not deny it; I leave them the liberty to clamor; I only wish that they may have eyes to distinguish that it is not the fault of the establishment, nor of him who planned it.

“I confess to some degree of boldness in coming to erect a trading-post for the company, in the midst of an ungoverned people. They now begin to have some first ideas of subordination, but these will soon be effaced, since the company have suddenly reduced them to the necessity of accepting whatever the commissioners feel disposed to give. The savages are also exposed to the insults of these commissioners of the company, who treat them according to their whim, or rather, according to the brutal disposition which this kind of people usually possess.

“I wish to believe that the affairs of the kingdom have induced the Count to adopt the present system for a time, with the intention of uniting this post to his Majesty’s domain, after the lease has expired. It is in this belief that I have devoted myself here to the service of the king. In managing our allies, I endeavor to make them understand that this second captivity, or rather this barbarous tyranny, will soon end. I do not know whether all our promises can induce them to be patient till that time. I fear that this kind of servitude will cause them to trade with the English, and form alliances with them. It will not be just to blame me if this should be the case.

“If this establishment is bad, it would be well for the Count to decide its fate at once. I have spoken my opinion about it; I have explained the circumstances of the case; you have been convinced of the necessity for erecting this fort, and its utility in the service of the king, the progress of religion, and the advancement of the colony. It only remains for me now to imitate the governor of the Holy City—take water and wash my hands of the affair.

“Had it been the pleasure of my lord to grant me the government of this colony, it would have been in my case, as in all others. Cries and complaints would have been changed into congratulations and compliments; because those who envy me, and who, without cause, fear my advancement, have sufficient power to blacken all I do, with the desire to effect my removal; while, if they saw their hopes frustrated, they would follow the ordinary course of people, and applaud the very project against which they had inveighed.

“If you would yourself make the regulations for this post, instead of sending general orders to Canada, every thing would go much better; for not being near the governor-general and intendant myself to urge my own claims, they always have some private reason for not granting me the protection which I ask of them. All this is done, in order to manage those who oppose me. It is not in my power to prevent this, whatever measures I may take.

"They continue to send out traders among our allies, under the plausible pretext of a continuation of the permits. The traders, finding themselves at greater liberty now than ever before, are guilty of conduct disgraceful to the French nation, and enormities are committed that deserve correction. These things cause great disaffection among our allies, which it will be difficult to remedy.

"Last year they sent M. Boudor, a Montreal merchant, into the country of the Sioux, to join Le Sueur. He succeeded so well in that journey that he transported thither twenty-five or thirty thousand pounds of merchandise, with which to trade in all the country of the Ottawas. This proved to him an unfortunate investment, as he has been robbed of part of the goods by the Outagamies. I believed it necessary that you should be informed of this affair, that you might apply a remedy.

"The occasion of this robbery by one of our own allies, was as follows: I speak with a full knowledge of the facts, as they occurred while I was at Michilimackinac. From time immemorial, our allies have been at war with the Sioux, and on my arrival at Michilimackinac, in conformity to the orders of M. Frontenac, the most able man who has ever come into Canada, I attempted to negotiate a truce between the Sioux and all our allies. Succeeding in this negotiation, I took the occasion to turn their arms against the Iroquois, with whom we were then at war; and soon after I effected a treaty of peace between the Sioux, and the French and their allies, which lasted two years.

"At the end of that time, the Sioux came in great numbers, to the villages of the Miamis, under pretense of ratifying the treaty. They were well received by the Miamis, and after spending several days in their villages, departed, apparently perfectly satisfied with their good reception, as they certainly had every reason to be.

"The Miamis, believing them already far distant, slept quietly; but the Sioux, who had premeditated the attack, returned the same night to the principal village of the Miamis, where most of the tribes were congregated, and, taking them by surprise, slaughtered nearly three thousand and put the rest to flight.

"This perfidy irritated all the nations. They came to Michilimackinac with their complaints, begging me to join with them and exterminate the Sioux. But the war we then had upon our hands did not permit me to listen to their proposition, so it became necessary for me to hold a great council, and play the orator in a long harangue. In conclusion, I advised them to 'weep their dead, and wrap them up, and leave them to sleep coldly till the day of vengeance should come;' telling them that we must sweep the land, on this side, of the Iroquois, as it was necessary to extinguish even their memory, after which the allied tribes could more easily avenge the atrocious deed that the Sioux had just committed upon them.

In short, I managed them so well, that the affair was settled in the manner that I proposed.

“But the twenty-five permits still existed; and the cupidity of the French induced them to go among the Sioux to trade for beaver. Our allies complained bitterly of this, saying it was gross injustice to them, as they had taken up arms in our quarrel against the Iroquois, while the French traders were carrying munitions of war to the Sioux, to enable them to kill the rest of our allies, as they had the Miamis. They begged me to remedy this, especially as the French were passing over their land, and before their villages, which was a violation of their rights.

“I immediately informed M. Frontenac; and M. Champigny having read the communication and noticed the reasons that I gave, commanded that an ordinance be published at Montreal, forbidding the traders to go to the country of the Sioux for the purpose of traffic, under penalty of a thousand francs fine, the confiscation of their goods, and other arbitrary penalties, according to the opinion I might give on the subject. This ordinance was sent to me at Michilimackinac, with orders to publish it there and in all the other remote posts. This was faithfully executed.

“The same year, I descended to Quebec, having asked to be relieved. Since that time, in spite of this prohibition, the French have continued to trade with the Sioux, but not without being exposed to affronts and indignities from our allies themselves, which bring dishonor on the French name.

“All the nations, remembering the promise which I had made to go with them against the Sioux as soon as the war with the Iroquois was ended, have now called on me to fulfil it. As the season furnished me a good excuse, I have made use of it; also telling them that to-day I was fighting against the English, and they must be patient a while longer.

“They replied, that if I would not enter into their quarrel, they had one request to make, which they hoped I would grant, namely, to prevent the French, as I did at Michilimackinac, from going to the homes of the Sioux to carry them arms and munitions of war. They thought I ought to be the more determined in my orders, as they had recently had a combat with the Sioux, and had found among the slain the bodies of two Frenchmen, who had fought with the Sioux against our own allies.

“I have given my opinion on this subject to M. Callieres and M. Beauharnais, and explained to them clearly that it is important that we should not thus violate our promises, and that we cannot do so without exposing ourselves to the danger of losing the confidence of our allies. I do not consider it best any longer to allow the traders to carry on commerce with the Sioux, under any pretext whatever, especially as M. Boudor has just been robbed by the Fox nation, and M. Juchereau has given a thousand crowns, in goods, for the right of passage through the country of the allies to his habitation. They assert that they have a right to demand this, as he carries succor to their enemies—and I believe they reason correctly.

“The allies say that Le Sueur has gone to the homes of the Sioux on the Mississippi; that they are resolved to oppose him, and if he offers any resistance, they will not be answerable for the consequences. It would be well, therefore, to give Le Sueur warning, by the governor of Mississippi.

"All these disorders arise solely on account of the remote trading-posts, which are all useless, or rather, very injurious, since they serve only as pretexts for obtaining permits. When these are obtained, instead of going directly to their several posts, they traffic for beaver and smaller furs along the great river of the Outawas, on the shores of Lakes Huron, Superior and Michigan, and all through the country of the Outawas. It is thus they have been in the habit of doing, and still do. Messrs. de la Forest and De Tonti, and now Juchereau and Pascaud, who are associated with them, trade in all this country, even to the environs of Detroit.

"These things cause public jealousy, and give license to all the pranks of the lawless Canadians, who say, without ceremony, that it is only the circumspect and obedient who are dupes. In truth, they are not entirely wrong; for it is grievous to them to see the traders, with permits, skimming the very cream of the country, which had previously been given to themselves. I have written often on this subject, but a perfect silence has thus far been maintained in all my instructions from government.

"You know that the country of the Illinois has been granted to M. la Salle, with stipulations and conditions, by none of which, however, did he consider himself bound; and that post has only served to cause many disputes among His Majesty's traders, on account of the bad quality of beaver there. This is the reason that the Count has forbidden Messrs. la Forest and Tonti to establish themselves there, while, at the same time, he permits them to trade for small furs—which excites some surprise, since it is well known that there are no other furs than the skins of the buffalo and roebuck. Of these, however, they can find enough elsewhere, as they have always had the liberty of trading where they pleased, without any reproof.

"The Sauteurs, being friendly with the Sioux, wished to give passage through their country to M. Boudor and others, permitting them to carry arms and other munitions of war to this nation; but the other nations being opposed to it, differences have arisen between them, which have resulted in the robbery of M. Boudor. This has given occasion to the Sauteurs to make an attack upon the Sacs and Foxes, killing thirty or forty of them. So there is war among this people.

"I should have remedied all these disorders, and put an end to these differences, if I had not been here with my bâton blanc, with no instructions from the king to employ it in favor of the savages, to whom we never speak on subjects of importance with empty hands.

"Similar massacres have been committed formerly, but I have been able to settle all difficulties, because M. Frontenac sent me every year, a considerable amount of goods, to be disposed of according to circumstances, the intendant taking certificates of the distributions as I made them.

“Since his death, the government has pursued a different course, sending me nothing to Detroit for such emergencies. I have written to the governor-general and intendant for such a fund, but they have not deigned to reply. There being, in all this region, no other establishment than this, of which M. Callieres has given me the general command, this authority will be but a shadow, if they continue the practice that they have commenced, which is, to send special envoys to the homes of the nations with presents.

“These envoys cannot go without expense; or, at least, the government must permit those who go on such an embassy to load their canoes with goods for the purposes of trade. The effect is, that these persons have no other object than to obtain the greatest possible number of beaver, even employing the presents with which they are charged, for their own profit, having no person to inspect their conduct.

“It would be much more natural that all such commissions should be addressed directly to Detroit, and that everything should pass through my hands, because I should order the chiefs of the nations to come here and settle all their disputes. In regard to the distribution and use which I should make of the presents that might be committed to my care, I would give my certificate for them, and the other officers, the missionaries and even the agents, might give theirs—so there would be no abuses committed. Besides, who can be chosen to settle the quarrels of the savages, that knows their manners, their habits and inclinations, better than I, or in whom they have more confidence?

“Would it not be expedient for you to send me a commission for the general command of this post, and of other remote ones, in order to put an end to the present system of injustice?

“The savages have just informed me that four loaded canoes have recently been sent into the north of Lake Superior, past a village of the Sauteurs; I do not know for what purpose, but probably, as usual, on some plausible pretext. The Sioux, to whom these canoes are probably sent, are a people of no value to us, as they are too far distant to be in any way advantageous to our commerce.

“As the convoy that comes from Montreal usually remains here only two or three days, I had written this letter thus far, in order not to delay it. I have frequently mentioned M. Callieres, not knowing that he was dead, which I have just learned with sorrow. His death will be a loss to the colony, which had need of a person of such experience.

“Some time since, I wrote to M. Callieres, not being aware of his death, requesting him to increase this garrison to fifty men, that it might be in a state of effectual defense in case of an attack. A sufficient number of men for this purpose seems peculiarly necessary at a post that is liable to be deprived of all external aid. M. Vaudreuil, the present governor-general, has replied, that he could not spare any soldiers, since many of them had died the past year, and some had deserted. Nine soldiers have also deserted from this post; however, they have requested permission to return. Some of them say that they took this course because they had been promised, on leaving Montreal, that after three years' service, they should be discharged. In fact, M. de Callieres gave them his word for it in public. Others say that the cause of their desertion was, that they were overburdened with work; that they were required to do other than military service; and that they were vexed to see the profits of their labor returning to a company which treated them, in their need, as Turk treats Moor. There are yet others, who speak of promises to give them lands, and of allowing them to establish themselves here, and that, finding themselves deceived, they resolved to desert.

"It is very certain that when I left Montreal, Messrs. Callieres and Champigny encouraged me to hope for an increased number of troops; therefore, I thought best to refresh the memory of M. de Callieres in my letter. On that account, Messrs. Vaudreuil and Beauharnais allowed me to receive the deserters, supposing that the new ordinance against deserters had not been published.

M. de Callieres had also granted my request that six families might be sent to settle here; but this has been refused me since his death, with the excuse that none have offered to go—although I am credibly informed that as many families as could be wished, would gladly come, if they had the liberty to do so. I had also asked for cattle. The company were very willing to bear the expense of their transportation, and the directors inform me they had borrowed two boats for conveying them—but M. Vaudreuil does not see fit to grant them.

"I do not know whether any one has written you that the directors made a new contract with me the past year, by which, in consideration of the care that I am to take of their interests at this post, preventing fraud and embezzlement on the part of the employèes of the company, and, as far as is in my power, hindering others from trading in this vicinity, they pledge themselves to pay me the sum of two thousand francs a year, and to furnish subsistence to myself and family during the time of its tenure.

"Asking for myself only the continued honor of your protection, I am with very profound respect, sir,

"Your very humble, and]

"Very obedient servant,

LA MOTTE CADILLAC.

P. S.—M. de Tonti, who is at Quebec, informs me that M. Vaudreuil and M. Beauharnais have forbidden his writing to you at length concerning this post."

Under the skilful management of the commandant, Fort Pontchartrain was rapidly increasing in numbers and prosperity. A number of Frenchmen took up their abode within its enclosure, notwithstanding the efforts of the Company of the colony, who, possessing the exclusive monopoly of the fur trade, were averse to having settlers locate at that point. Among other Indians drawn to Detroit by Cadillac, were the Pottawatamies, whose village was on the Navarre farm, the Hurons on the Jones farm, near where the gas buildings now stand, and the Ottawas on the east side of the river, nearly opposite to Fort Pontchartrain. Cadillac built comfortable houses for some of the chiefs, and endeavored to inspire them with a love for the habits of civilized life. He proposed to the colonial minister the organization of Indian companies and regiments, to be armed and disciplined like French soldiers, and also advocated the establishment of a college, for the education of the children of the French and Indian settlers around Detroit.

As the result of the efforts of the Jesuits, aided by the influence of the colonial government, to terminate the very existence of Fort Pontchartrain, we find the king issuing, in May 1703, an order for the principal men of the country to assemble, to consider the propriety of continuing to maintain the post. The order is as follows :

“The information laid before his Majesty regarding the establishment of Detroit, is so conflicting, that he is very glad, once for all, to know what he is to rely upon. His Majesty will not repeat to them the reasons which have prompted him to order this report to be made. Sieur de la Motte Cadillac continues to be persuaded that these reasons exist, and that this establishment will have all the effect expected from it. Others pretend that the land there is good for nothing; that it will never produce anything to feed its inhabitants; that the only thing there, is very poor fishing, and that the hunting is between thirty and forty leagues off; and finally, that it is to be feared, that the Iroquois will attack that post without it being in our power to assist it, and that war will recommence in consequence. The company of the colony complain likewise, that it involves them in an exorbitant expense, which it is out of their power to sustain, if it be continually required to convey to that post the supplies necessary for the support of the people there. His Majesty's pleasure is, that the Messrs. de Callieres and de Beauharnais, assemble the said Sieur de la Motte Cadillac and the most respectable of the inhabitants of the country, whether officers or settlers, for the purpose of discussing, with great attention and care, the reasons for and against that establishment, and that they afterwards draw up an exact report thereon, which they will cause to be signed by the said Sieur de la Motte Cadillac, and the most respectable of those who will have attended that meeting, and that they will sign it themselves, so that his Majesty may issue orders on its contents, either to consent to the preservation or augmentation of that post, or to abandon it altogether, or to allow it to remain as a mere trading post. His Majesty is persuaded that they will act herein, without prejudice, and with a view solely to the public good and service."

The wishes of the king were not carried out. The governor-general and intendant, in lieu of summoning Cadillac and the principal inhabitants of the country, to make the investigation called for in November, assembled at Quebec such persons as were in their interest, together with several traders from Detroit, then in Quebec, who were not permitted to leave, until the report declaring Fort Pontchartrain burdensome and inhospitable, and recommending its abandonment, had been drawn up and signed.

During this year, 1703, the fort was partially destroyed, being set on fire by an Indian. Besides, a portion of the defences, the church and house of the Récollets, Cadillac's house, and that of his Lieutenant, was burned. The Indians aided in rebuilding, and presented the commandant with 100 bushels of corn, in part to cure the loss he had sustained by the fire. Soon after this occurrence, a band of Miamis attacked the Indians at Detroit, killing five. The fire and the attack were supposed by Cadillac to be the result of Jesuit intrigue to destroy the post, but we have no evidence that such was the case.

It was during the same year that Cadillac made the discovery that his Lieutenant and two of the Commissioners had, contrary to the contract with the Company of the Colony, traded with the Indians. He also detected the commissioners in embezzling the furs of the company. Having found the charges against them, he reported the occurrence to the directors; also, informing the governor and intendant of the circumstances. The accused parties were near relatives of the principal directors of the company, and, in order to shield them, sent M. Vincelot, another relative, to investigate the subject. The report rendered by the envoy was, of course, favorable to his kinsmen, and satisfactory to the directors.

Cadillac, having gone to Montreal in September, 1704, was arrested by order of the governor and intendant, on various charges of a vexatious, rather than a serious, character, and the suit was not decided until June 15th, 1705. He was acquitted, but consent to his return to Detroit was not granted. In the meantime, Count Pontchartrain arrived in Canada, and Cadillac at once sought an interview. He gave the minister a detailed account of all his doings at Detroit—of the many obstacles that beset his path—of the attempts of the colonial government and Jesuits to destroy him and the post—of the grasping and selfish policy of the company, together with a defense against the recent charges, to the perfect satisfaction of the colonial minister, whose mind had been poisoned against Cadillac, and whom, when they first met, he had bitterly reproached. A lengthy document, still preserved, gives what purports to be an authentic account of this interesting interview between Cadillac and the Count Pontchartrain.

In the summer of 1706, upon returning to his post, Cadillac found that his long absence had greatly endangered its safety. His successor, M. Bougmont, had no control over the savages, who became insolent and turbulent, until, finally, in the spring of 1706, the Ottawas made an attack upon the Miamis, near the fort, killing Father Constantine, a Récollet, and la Rivière, a soldier, who went outside the palisade. Upon Cadillac being informed of the occurrence, he was greatly incensed, and determined to have immediate redress for the outrage. The Ottawas, greatly alarmed, sued for peace to the governor-general, in the most humble terms, and sent him various presents. By him they were referred to Cadillac. At the council, held soon afterwards, he demanded in a peremptory manner that Le Pesant, or the Bear, a chief of great influence, whom Cadillac considered the principal offender, should be delivered to him for punishment. The Indians yielded to the demand, and when the old chief was given into custody, instead of putting him to death, as his tribe expected, Cadillac pardoned him and gave him his liberty. This act of mercy was very near involving the commandant in difficulties with the Miamis, who clamored for the Ottawa's blood, and soon after killed three Frenchmen, but by his courage and knowledge of Indian character, he arrested the impending danger.

Nothing of sufficient importance for me to stop to narrate, occurred to the little colony during the succeeding five years, until, in the early part of 1711, the gallant Cadillac, having been appointed Governor of Louisiana, left the fort and colony he had founded, forever. The year after his departure, was one of tragic interest to Detroit. It was attacked by a large body of Foxes, a warlike race of Indians, who were doubtless induced to make the assault by English and Iroquois influence. Du Buisson, Cadillac's successor, has left us an interesting report of the attack and its results.

In the spring of 1712, the Indians encamped in large numbers near the fort, in opposition to the remonstrances of Du Buisson, who, however, was compelled to treat them with mildness, as his whole force consisted of but thirty Frenchmen, and his ordnance of two swivels. They were insolent, claimed the country as their own, and killed the poultry and other animals of the French, who dared to offer no resistance, but when they ventured to come into the fort to kill an inhabitant, Du Buisson could no longer restrain himself, but took arms and drove them from the immediate vicinity, but they intrenched themselves within easy musket shot. He then tore down a chapel and some other buildings that stood outside the fort, so that the Indians could neither find shelter there nor set fire to the buildings, and thus burn the fort itself. The Indian allies of the French—the Pottawattamies, the Ottawas, and the Hurons—had not yet returned from their winter hunting grounds. The French were in consternation, and the commander, as he quaintly says, "did not know on what saint to call." He says he put on the best countenance he could, and encouraged his people. He divided his little force into four brigades, and assigned them their stations. The cannon were ready to be loaded, with slugs of iron made by the blacksmith, and the Rev. Father Denieau was ready to give absolution in case of necessity. "But heaven watched over our preservation," says the commander, and just at the crisis of their fate, a large force of friendly Indians arrived, some from a great distance. These were the Illinois, the Missouri, the Osages, as well as the tribes in the vicinity—the Ottawas, the Pottawattamies and the Hurons. Detroit, says the narrator, never saw such a collection of people. They were admitted to the fort and supplied with ammunition. The Foxes, from being the besiegers, became the besieged. For nineteen days they held their position with wondrous valor and endurance. They dug holes to protect themselves from the firing of the besiegers. They could not go out for water or food, and their women and children died with hunger and thirst.

When the Indian allies took prisoners, they shot at them for sport and they burned them. The Foxes sued for mercy, but the Indian allies would listen to no terms. "I was touched with compassion," says Du Buisson, "but war and pity do not agree together." On the night of the 19th day, in the rain, the Foxes escaped and took refuge on a point running into Lake St. Clair, a few miles above the city. The French and their allies followed and attacked them, and at the first onset, lost twenty men. They then commenced a regular siege, which lasted four days—a hundred canoes carrying the provisions. After fighting with desperate courage, the Foxes surrendered at discretion, but no quarter was given to them. The women and children were spared at the time, but only to be shot at for amusement afterward—four or five of them in a day, as modern sportsmen shoot at turkeys. The Hurons did not spare a single one that fell to their lot. Nearly 1,000 of the Foxes perished in this ill-fated attack upon Detroit, while the allies lost only sixty Indians and one Frenchman. "In this manner," says Du Buisson, "came to an end those wicked nations; our Rev. Father chanted a grand mass to render thanks to God for having delivered us from the enemy."

The massacre of so large a number of their tribe, did not put an end to hostilities on the part of the Foxes. The war parties infested every line of communication between the distant posts, murdering many of the coureurs du bois and traders, and soon after, they induced the powerful Sioux to form an alliance with them. The Iroquois also secretly urged them on, without taking any active part in the depredations upon the French. The Government, as the only means of safety, resolved upon the utter extermination of the Foxes, and in the spring of 1716, sent an expedition against them, under the command of M. Louvigny, lieutenant of Quebec. After a siege of a few days, they capitulated to the French, who, by the stipulations, were to receive six hostages, to secure their sending deputies to Montreal, the ensuing year, to ratify the peace.

During the year 1717, M. Tonti, commandant of the post at Detroit, who had been absent in Canada, returned to the post. An official account of his journey was sent to M. Vaudreuil, bearing date October 12, 1717, was submitted to the council of Marine, and, as customary, a summary was made by the secretary, and approved by the council. The following copy gives an interesting description of the state of affairs at Fort Pontchartrain, nearly a hundred and fifty years ago:

" October 12th, 1717.

" At the same time that M. Louvigny left Montreal to go to Michili-mackinac, M. Tonti also started for Detroit, the commerce of that post having been granted to him only on condition that he should not extend his trade beyond his own jurisdiction, nor employ others to carry goods to sell to more distant tribes.

"In conformity to the orders of the council, M. Tonti took the route of the lakes, and met, on Lake Ontario, three canoes from Michilimackinac, three from Detroit, and three from Saginaw, which were going to Orange. He succeeded, by fair words and presents, in persuading them to follow him to Detroit. Two days later, when he was six miles from Niagara, he met seventeen canoes of savages bound for Detroit, but who were first going to Orange. He induced them also to abandon their design, by the promise that the price of merchandise at Detroit should be diminished, and he would also give them some brandy. Ten canoes followed him to Detroit, and seven took the route to Montreal. L'Oranger, the interpreter, was dispatched to accompany these last, and prevent their going to the English. He was only able to conduct six of them to Montreal; the seventh escaped and went to Orange.

"According to his promise, M. Tonti made satisfactory arrangements with the merchants. He also permitted the savages to buy two or three quarts of brandy each, to take to their villages. But they first agreed that it should be carefully distributed by a trusty person. He hoped the council would not disapprove of what he had done, nor of the continuance of the same course, as he had no other intention than merely to hinder the savages from going to the English.

"M. Tonti arrived at Detroit, July 3d, and immediately held a council with the nations which are established there, in order to engage the chiefs to come to Montreal, to testify concerning what had passed in the war with the Foxes; but they were unable to come, on account of an affair which occurred a short time before, which obliged them to remain in their own village. They have promised to come next year, without fail. They complained that the French had sold their goods too high, but they hoped that the change of commandant would reduce the prices; if not, they should go to the English. M. Tonti then called a meeting of the merchants, and they all agreed upon a price for certain kinds of merchandise, with which the savages appeared satisfied.

"The difficulty which hindered the principal chiefs from going from Detroit to Montreal, was caused by an Outawa of this post and four other savages. All five of them pretended to start on a war excursion against the Flat Heads; but, while they were in the river of the Miamis, they killed an Iroquois and his wife, who was a Miami, and two children. This bloody deed would certainly have caused a war, for the Iroquois and Miamis took the part of their murdered people against the Outawas and other nations at Detroit. M. Tonti persuaded the nations at Detroit to join him and go to Saginaw for the murderers, and deliver them up to the Miamis. For this purpose, the Outawas and Pottawatomies each sent a canoe, to which M. Tonti added one of the French, and placed the whole under the command of Lieut. Bragelonne. The three murderers were arrested and brought to Detroit, where M. Tonti kept them in custody till he obtained news from the Miamis, to whom he immediately made known the satisfaction the Outawas were ready to offer them. By this means, and by the presents which the nations of Detroit and even the French will make to the Miamis, M. Tonti hopes that nation will be conciliated, and the war prevented.

“ Approved by the Council of Marine, January 18, 1718.

“ L. A. DE BOURBON.”

During the ensuing seven years—from 1717 to 1724—there was a constant succession of difficulties between the different Indian tribes and the French. No sooner was one “ bad affair ” adjusted than some real or supposed injury would incite the savages to indignation and revenge. In the year 1725, while peace reigned throughout the borders of Canada, and her people were rapidly increasing in numbers and wealth, two events occurred which caused great grief and consternation. One was the loss of the French ship of war Camel, wrecked near Louisburg, having on board a large number of passengers, among whom was Lieut. Louvigny of Quebec, afterward the intendant of Canada, and several colonial officers and priests, all of whom were lost, besides a rich cargo. The other calamity which befel the colony in the autumn of the same year, was the death of M. Vaudrueil, governor-general, who expired on the 10th of October 1726, after having governed the country in an able and impartial manner for twenty-one years. M. Beauharnais succeeded to the government.

From this date until the year 1746, it is impossible to trace a connected chain of events at Fort Pontchartrain or at the other French posts. It appears to have been a period of profound peace and prosperity. As the number of settlers at Detroit increased, the stockade that inclosed the town and constituted the fort, was greatly enlarged and strengthened, until it inclosed as many as one hundred thatched houses and five hundred inhabitants. Within the palisades, which were about twenty-five feet high, with a wooden bastion at each corner and a blockhouse over each of the two gateways, were barracks for the soldiers, the Council House and St. Anne's Church. The streets were narrow, with the exception of the carriage road, called the chemin du ronde, which encircled the town just within the palisades.

In 1746, a restless spirit began to exhibit itself among a portion of the French population, who were evidently jealous of the wonderful growth and prosperity of the towns of their English neighbors, which manifested itself about the end of the year by annoyances and encroachments upon the persons and property of the English. The government took alarm at their movements, and the king issued an order requiring Colonial Governor of America to raise a number of independent companies of soldiers. These were to be aided by a suitable armament sent out from Great Britain, and a campaign, having for its object nothing less than the entire subjugation of Canada, was to be begun. Before this plan of conquest was carried into execution, the peace of Aix la Chapelle was signed, and the mutual restoration of all places taken during the war being one of its conditions. This restored Breton and Louisberg to France.

A few years later and the campaign, known as the French war, began, and was carried on for many years with various success. It is a familiar story, which the scope of this brief history will not permit me to linger over. Suffice it to say that, on the 18th of September, 1759, the fleur de lis of France, which had waved for a hundred years over the walls of Quebec, fell, upon the resistless onset of the gallant Wolfe and his noble army, and that, on the 8th of September, of the year following, when Montreal capitulated, Canada and all its dependencies surrendered to the British Crown. Four days after the fall of Montreal, Major Robert Rogers was sent to take possession of the Northwest, and administer the oath of allegiance to the inhabitants. On his arrival at Detroit, so entirely unacquainted with the progress of events were the officers and inhabitants, that the commandant, Bellestro, disputed the authority by which Major Rogers demanded the surrender of Fort Pontchartrain, until satisfied beyond a doubt by letters from the Governor-General of Canada that the post must be given up, Captain Bellestro lowered his flag, surrendered the post with ill-disguised chagrin, marched the garrison out upon the plains, and ordered them to lay down their arms. So passed away French sovereignty from Fort Pontchartrain forever. The French troops were sent as prisoners of war to Philadelphia, but the militia were disarmed, and, after taking the oath of allegiance, allowed to retain their houses and farms.

Leaving Captain Campbell in command at Detroit, after an ineffectual attempt, owing to the lateness of the season, to reach Mackinac, Major Rogers, with a small detachment, set out on the 23d of December, 1760, for Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Early the following spring, a body of British troops, under command of Lieut. Leslie, took possession of Mackinac, Saut Ste. Marie, and Green Bay, and thus the whole Northwest passed forever from under the dominion of France. By the change, which did not in the least disturb the tranquility of the Canadians and coureur des bois, a fresh impetus was given to the fur trade, as the English goods were sold at much lower prices than the French.

The jealousy of the Indian tribes was excited to a very great degree by the change of rulers, and the spirit of disaffection with which they received their new rulers, was continually increased by the overbearing and often unjust treatment of the English—settlers taking possession of the choicest Indian Territory grounds without treaty or purchase. The Senecas and Delawares became greatly incensed by these unjust aggressions, and at this time a prophet appeared among the last-mentioned tribe and, by his visions, added fuel to the flame. In 1761 an abortive attempt was made to destroy the posts of the Northwest, and was followed the ensuing year by numerous outbreaks, but no decisive blow was struck.

Under the rule of the French, the ruin of the Indian tribes might long have been postponed, but the supremacy of the Anglo-American in the Northwest was the signal for their rapid decline. The red men saw their danger, and, under the leadership of the daring Pontiac, struggled fiercely to avert it, but to no purpose. With the close of the year 1762, this celebrated Ottawa chief, who had conceived a scheme for the extirpation of their rulers and oppressors from their country, found all his plans consummated. Far and near Pontiac dispatched his messengers with gifts and belts and wampum to call the tribes to a great council. It was held at a short distance from Detroit, on the banks of the Ecœces River, near the villages of the Ottawas, Hurons and Pottawattamies. Hither came deputations from the Ojibways, from the powerful Iroquois, from the Illinois, and from the Sacs. The council fire was lighted, the pipe of peace was passed around, when the great leader arose, and, in terms of impassioned eloquence, addressed the dusky warriors. He described their former happiness under the French rule, and detailed the wrongs inflicted upon them by the English. He then spoke of the strength and prowess of the tribes represented in council, and dilated upon the ease with which the invaders might be crushed. Then, unfolding his well-laid plans, he assigned to each tribe its share in the plot for the extermination of the English. The destruction of the forts east and south of Lake Erie was assigned to the Delawares, Senecas, and other tribes of the Six Nations. Fort St. Joseph to the Illinois, and Mackinac to the Ojibways and Sacs, while Detroit was reserved by Pontiac for the Ottawas, Hurons and Pottawattamies, led on by himself. The chiefs present approved the plan, and other preliminaries being arranged the council dispersed.

For the following beautiful picture of Detroit and its surroundings, as in 1763, just before the consummation of Pontiac's attack upon the town, I am indebted to the distinguished historian, Bancroft :

“Of all the inland settlements, Detroit was the largest and most esteemed. The deep majestic river, more than half a mile broad, carrying its vast flood calmly and noiselessly between the straight and well-defined banks of its channel, imparted a grandeur to a country whose rising grounds and meadows, plains festooned with prolific wild-vines, woodlands, brooks, and fountains, were so mingled together that nothing was left to desire. The climate was mild, and the air salubrious. Good land abounded, yielding maize, wheat, and every vegetable. The forests were natural parks, stocked with buffaloes, deer, quails, partridges, and wild turkeys. Water-fowl, of delicious flavor, hovered along its streams, which yielded to the angler an astonishing quantity of fish, especially the white fish, the richest and most luscious of them all. There every luxury of the table might be enjoyed, by the sole expense of labor.

“This lovely and cheerful region attracted settlers, alike white men and savages; and the French had so occupied the two banks of the river, that their numbers were rated even so high as twenty-five hundred souls, of whom were five hundred men able to bear arms; three or four hundred French families. Yet an enumeration in 1764 proved them not so numerous, with only men enough to form three companies of militia; and in 1768 the official census reported but five hundred and seventy-two souls; an account of which is in harmony with the best tradition. The French dwelt on farms, which were about three or four acres wide on the river, and eighty acres deep; indolent, in the midst of plenty, graziers, as well as tillers of the soil, and enriched by Indian traffic.

“The English fort, of which Gladwyn was commander, was a large stockade, about twenty-five feet high, and twelve hundred yards in circumference, including perhaps eighty houses. It stood within the limits of the present city, on the river bank, commanding a wide prospect for nine miles above and below the city.”

On the 6th of May, 1763, a beautiful Ojibway girl, much attached to Gladwyn, the commandant at Detroit, came to the fort, bringing with her a pair of mocassins, ornamented with porcupine work, as a present to Gladwyn, who noticed something unusual in her look and manner. After she had left his quarters, the sentinel at the door saw her lingering at the street corner, though the hour of closing the gate for the night had nearly arrived. At length, Catherine—for so the officers called her—attracted the notice of Gladwyn himself, who called her back and urged her to declare what was weighing upon her mind. After much urgency and many promises not to betray her, she revealed to her lover the startling intelligence that, on the following day, Pontiac would attack the fort, and every Englishman would be killed. Gladwyn, an officer of coolness and distinguished courage, thanked his faithful mistress, at the same time promising her a rich reward, and directed her to return to her tribe, that no suspicion might be entertained against her. Her story was the same afternoon verified by a soldier at the fort, who had been captured in his boyhood, and adopted into the tribe of his captors, who received from his Indian sister, intimation of Pontiac's designs, which he immediately made known to the commander.

Every preparation was at once made to resist the attack. Half the garrison and all the officers prepared to spend the night upon the ramparts. About forty traders and engages who resided in the fort, were ordered to be prepared for sudden and active service. From sunset till dawn, an anxious watch was kept by the soldiers, who were still ignorant of the danger that threatened them. Gladwyn and his officers again and again mounted the wooden ramparts, and gazed anxiously forth into the gloom. At intervals, the night wind bore to their listening ears, sounds of fearful portent—the sullen booming of the Indian drum and the wild war-whoops, as the savages danced the war-dance, in preparation for the morrow's work.

On the following morning, Pontiac was seen marching down the road leading to the fort, followed by about sixty chiefs, moving along with solemn and stately tread, in Indian file, their faces begrimed with paint, and their heads decorated with feathers of the eagle, hawk or raven. All were wrapped to the throat in colored blankets, beneath which they carried concealed rifles, shortened for that purpose. As Pontiac and his followers reached the eastern gate, it was thrown open, and as the crafty leader traversed the short distance which intervened between the gate and the council-house, he became convinced that his plot was discovered, there being an unusual array of armed soldiers in the streets and upon the ramparts. The Ottawa chief, with his eagle eye, also observed that the shops were closed, and that the traders and engages were all armed. When the Indians were seated in the council chamber in presence of Maj. Gladwyn and several of his officers, all armed with swords and pistols, Pontiac demanded, "Why do I see so many of my father's young men standing in the street with their guns?" Gladwyn answered, through the interpreter, that he had ordered them under arms for the sake of exercise and discipline. After the customary pause, the business of the council commenced, by Pontiac rising and addressing the assemblage. The tall and erect chief, with his graceful figure drawn up to its full height, spoke in eloquent words of the number and prowess of his followers, of their desire to live in friendship with the English, and, as the speaker drew near the period described by the Ojibway girl, for the delivery of the belt and the attack upon the garrison, his gesticulations became more violent and his manner more excited. At last, when Pontiac raised the wampum to give the preconcerted signal, Gladwyn, whose keen eye had watched his slightest motion, signed slightly with his hand. A sudden clash of arms resounded from the passage without, and the long roll of the drum filled the council chamber with its stunning din. Pontiac stood in mute astonishment, and when the sounds ceased, stammered out a few professions of friendship, as he presented the belt in the usual manner, and resumed his seat. Another pause ensued, and the commandant began his brief reply, assuring the Indians that friendship and protection should be extended towards them as long as they continued to deserve it, and threatened terrible vengeance for any act of perfidy or aggression. The council then broke up, and the gates of the fort, which had been closed during the conference, were flung open, and the baffled savages allowed to depart. No sooner were they beyond the precincts of the fort, and again breathing the pure air of the open fields, than their rage burst forth in the fearful war-whoop. Some rushed towards a solitary house on the common, where an Englishwoman and her two sons dwelt, whom they at once massacred and scalped; others sprang into canoes, and made all speed to the Isle au Cochon. Here resided an Englishman, at one time a sergeant in the army, whom they dragged from his hiding-place, where he had sought refuge, and murdered. The main body of the savages, numbering about one thousand warriors, surrounded the fort and opened fire on the garrison.

So weak did the commandant consider the post, that he had nearly determined to evacuate it, embark in the two vessels anchored in the river, and retire to Niagara, as he feared the savages would make a direct assault; but being assured by the French traders and others, that such a course was contrary to Indian tactics, he abandoned the idea. Detroit was now in a state of siege; day and night an incessant firing was kept up. Measures were at once taken to burn the buildings which could afford cover to the Indians, by hot shot and shells. It is said the Indians practised running toward the latter, and with exultant yells, blowing out the matches before they exploded. All the means which the savage mind could suggest, were employed by Pontiac, to destroy Detroit. Blazing arrows were shot into the town, for the purpose of burning it, in which they would undoubtedly have been successful, had not a Jesuit priest succeeded in convincing Pontiac that the conflagration of St. Anne's chapel, would call down the judgment of the Great Spirit. During the siege, the Indians endeavored to effect a breach in the palisade, and, aided by the commander, who, as a strategem, had ordered his men to cut also on the inside, it was soon accomplished. The breach was instantly filled with savages, when a cannon was discharged upon them, making terrible havoc in their ranks. From that time, the fort was merely invested, but, ere long, the garrison were reduced to great distress for provisions.

Major Campbell, second in command at Fort Detroit, was well known to the Indians, and was highly esteemed by them, as well as the French. Pontiac formed the design of securing this officer, and by threatening his life, gain possession of the post. In accordance with this plan, he sent a request, through the French inhabitants, that Major Campbell would visit him in his camp, that they might "settle all difficulties, and smoke the pipe of peace together," and pledged his word that he should return in safety. The messengers, relying on Pontiac's promise, advised Major Campbell to go. Anxious to terminate the siege, even at the hazard of his life, Major Campbell, accompanied by Lieut. McDougal, and several of the French inhabitants, repaired to Pontiac's camp at Parent's Creek. As soon as they were in his power, the crafty chief sent the French back, with a message to Major Gladwyn, that he should hold the two officers as hostages for the surrender of the fort. They were detained at the house of M. Meloche, near the bridge over Parent's Creek, but were permitted to walk out occasionally. During one of their walks, Lieut. McDougal succeeded in effecting his escape, and reaching the fort in safety. Major Campbell's age and defective sight, caused him to decline the attempt.

While one day taking his accustomed walk, he was met by a party of fierce Ojibways, who, in revenge for the death of one of their tribe, that day killed by the garrison, fell upon the gallant old soldier with their tomahawks, mutilating his body in the most shocking manner. The corpse was thrown into the river, and afterwards brought to shore and buried by the Canadians, among whom Campbell was very popular. Wassen, chief of the Ojibways, who committed the murder, immediately fled to Saginaw, to escape the vengeance of Pontiac, who was not privy to the murder, and who made every effort to apprehend the miscreant.

Expected supplies from Niagara failing to arrive, the schooner Gladwyn was dispatched on the 21st of May, to hasten them in. On the morning of the 30th, the long expected convoy came in sight. A long line of twenty-two boats were rounding the woody projection, then called Montreal Point, with the flag of England flying from the stern of the foremost, and with one accord, the garrison broke into hearty cheers, at the same moment firing a salute, as a welcome to their approaching friends. But sad was their disappointment, when in place of the answering salute, they suddenly beheld dark, naked figures rising in the boats, with wild gestures, and the distant war-whoop of the savages broke upon their ears. The boats had been captured by the enemy, and the prisoners were taken to Isle au Cochon, and suffered death, with all the horrors of Indian barbarity. This terrible calamity was followed by other disasters. Mackinac at the north, St. Josephs to the west, Forts Miami and Sandusky at the south, and Presque Isle at the east, each, in turn, fell, upon the attack by the savages. West of Niagara and Fort Pitt, Detroit was the only remaining post in the hands of the English. Still, the little garrison held out nobly under their heavy privations and disappointments. Every man was on duty. For sixty days and sixty nights, many of the soldiers were on the ramparts, catching a few hours sleep, with their clothes on, and with guns by their sides.

On the 3d of June, 1763, news arrived of the treaty of peace between Great Britain and France, by which all the French possessions in Canada and the Northwest were ceded to the English. This confirmed the Canadian and French traders and farmers in and around Detroit in maintaining a strict neutrality between the English garrison and the Indians. When Pontiac again renewed his solicitations that they would join their side against the English, one of the principal habitants was authorized to speak for them, as follows: "My brother, you see that our arms are tied by our great father, the king; untie this knot, and we will join you. Till that is done, we shall sit quietly on our mats." And no inducements or threats of Pontiac's could induce the French to change their decision.

On the last day of June, the Gladwyn, which had been sent to Niagara for aid, succeeded in reaching Detroit, after having been twice attacked by the Indians. She brought a supply of ammunition and provisions, together with a reinforcement of sixty troops. During the month of July the Indians made several ineffectual attempts to destroy the two vessels lying opposite the fort, by means of rafts loaded with pitch and other combustibles. On the 29th a fleet of boats reached Detroit, having on board three hundred troops, under the command of Captain Dalzell, an aide-de-camp of the British Commander-in-Chief, Sir Jeffrey Amherst. No sooner had this ardent officer effected a landing than he sought an interview with Major Gladwyn, asking permission to attack Pontiac in his camp, to which, at last, the cautious commandant yielded a reluctant assent. Accordingly, about two o'clock on the morning of July 31st, Capt. Dalzell and about three hundred men marched silently forth, in double file, and took the road leading south towards Pontiac's camp, while two gun boats proceeded up the river to cover the retreat as well as to take off the killed and wounded. In some way the wily chief had received information of the attack, and made his dispositions to receive the English troops in a most unexpected manner. Wherever there was a place of shelter beyond the reach of the guns of the fort, the Indians secreted themselves. Unsuspecting of danger, the advanced guard, led by Lieut. Brown, had reached the farther extremity of the bridge which spanned Parent's Creek, and the main body were just entering upon it, when the fearful war whoop burst upon the troops, accompanied by a volley of musketry. Half the advanced guard fell, and the survivors shrank back appalled from the unseen enemy, who were shielded by the darkness of the night. Capt. Dalzell hastened to the front, rallied the troops, and dashed boldly across the bridge and up the ascent beyond. The savages had fled. While the troops and their gallant leader vainly sought the foe, the enemy kept up a continual fire, and their war cry continued with unabated ferocity. Further advance was useless. No other alternative remained but to retreat to the fort, and resume the attack by daylight. As the soldiers retreated, in marching order, a constant fire was kept up by the Indians from behind barns, outhouses and fences, in very much the same manner that the British troops were fired upon some thirteen years later, by the men of Concord and Lexington, as they retreated back to Boston, along the road.

About a mile from the fort was a cluster of houses and barns, surrounded by strong picket fences. The river ran close on the left, and there was no way of escape except along the narrow passage that lay between. The troops were suffered to advance unmolested until they were directly opposite, when the Indians suddenly broke out with the terrific war-whoop, and poured volley after volley into the devoted band. The troops broke their ranks, and were only restrained by the presence of Capt. Dalzell, already twice wounded, from a perfect panic. Encouraged by his voice, they rallied and continued the march. A little farther on their leader stepped aside to aid a wounded soldier, when he was shot dead. The detachment at last reached the shelter of the fort, having sustained a loss of fifty-nine killed and wounded. The Indians did not lose above fifteen or twenty.

Sadly appropriate is the present name of that little stream. The bridge is gone, but Pontiac's tree still remains, scarred by the bullets of the terrible conflict. It is a gigantic white wood tree, sixteen feet in circumference, and stands on Jefferson avenue.

In speaking of the battle of Bloody Bridge, an able writer remarks that, although in European warfare it would be deemed a mere skirmish, yet, in a conflict with the American savages, it rises to the importance of a pitched battle; since these people being thinly scattered over a great extent of country, are accustomed to conduct their warfare by detail, and never take the field in any great force. The Indians were greatly elated by their success, and runners were sent out in every direction to spread the intelligence of their great victory. From this date until the end of September, when the advanced season compelled the Indians to seek in the chase that sustenance which they could no longer secure in that vicinity, slight skirmishes took place, and a few men were killed; but nothing of importance occurred to the besieged garrison. Through the most energetic efforts of Major Gladwyn, sufficient provisions were obtained from the Canadians to supply the town during the winter, which passed away in comparative quiet with the almost despairing garrison. With the return of spring, the Indian tribes again began to assemble around Detroit.

The operations of Pontiac finally attracted the attention of the English Government, and, in the summer of 1764, Gen. Bradstreet, with an army of three thousand men, was sent to the relief of the posts on the great lakes. They reached Detroit on the twenty-sixth of August, and the garrison, which had been besieged for fifteen months, were at last rescued. Fresh troops were at once substituted in their place. Bradstreet's next care was to inquire into the conduct of the Canadians of Detroit, and to punish such foes as had given aid to the Indians.

Pontiac, with a few of the more warlike of his followers, had retreated, before Bradstreet's overwhelming army, to the banks of the Maumee, from whence he sent a haughty defiance to the English commander. The Indians who remained were, for the most part, heartily tired of the war, which had involved them in great distress, cutting off the fur trade and then depriving them of the supplies which habit had made essential to their comfort. They therefore readily obeyed the summons to meet Gen. Bradstreet in council. It was held on the morning of the seventh of September, in the open air, with all the military pomp, calculated to inspire awe and respect among the tribes. Having settled the affairs of Detroit, and made peace with the Indians, Bradstreet sent strong detachments to take possession of Mackinac, and to occupy the deserted posts of Saut Ste. Marie and Green Bay.

Thus was terminated the memorable siege of Detroit. Bradstreet's expedition, ill-conducted as it was in many respects, was productive of benefit. The Indian tribes at Detroit had been brought to reason, and, for the present, at least, would probably remain tranquil.

Before concluding this chapter, I may add that Pontiac continued for nearly five years to entertain hopes of combining all the tribes of the Northwest and of the Mississippi Valley against the English, and with that object in view, visited different quarters of the country, and dispatched his runners and embassies far and near. Many of the tribes entered zealously, while others showed no disposition to enter into the project of the great chief. Pontiac had his own way of persuading such lukewarm spirits. Addressing the degenerate tribes of Illinois on one occasion, he exclaimed, frowning fiercely on the cowering assembly, "If you hesitate, I will consume your tribes as the fire consumes the dry grass on the prairie." The doubts of the Illinois vanished, and, with marvellous rapidity, they declared their concurrence in the orator's views.

In the month of April, 1769, while Pontiac was in Cahokia, nearly opposite to St. Louis, an Englishman named Williams, basely bribed an Indian, of the Kaskaskia tribe, with a barrel of rum, to murder Pontiac. The assassin, watching his opportunity, glided behind him and buried a tomahawk in his brain. The dead body was soon discovered in the forest where he had been killed, and startled cries and howlings announced the event. Pontiac's few followers seized their weapons, but were soon driven from the village by the Illinois, who took the part of their guilty countryman. This murder, which aroused the vengeance of all the tribes friendly to the great Ottawa chief, brought about a series of wars which only ended by the almost total extinction of the various tribes forming the Illinois Nation. The murdered chief lay on the spot where he had fallen until M. St. Ange, commandant of the post of St. Louis, mindful of former friendship, sent to claim the body, which he buried with military honors, within a few rods of the post. Could his shade have visited the scene of murder, his savage spirit would have exulted in the terrible vengeance which overwhelmed the abettors of the crime.

"Neither mound nor tablet," says Parkman, "marked the burial place of Pontiac. For a mausoleum, a city has risen above the forest here; and the race, whom he hated with such burning rancor, trample with unceasing footsteps over his forgotten grave."

CHAPTER IV.

Detroit in 1770—Erection of Fort Le Nault—Detroit in 1793—Evacuation by the British—General Harrison takes possession—Town destroyed by fire—Arrival of General Hull—Act passed for relief of the sufferers—Indian hostilities—War declared against Great Britain—Surrender of Detroit—Trial of General Hull—Evacuation of Detroit by the British—Mrs. McCarty's narrative.

A SYSTEM of conciliation was exercised by the English towards the French, and particularly towards the Indians, after the close of the Pontiac war. The commandants of Fort Detroit made grants of land to settlers along the river, and similar grants were also made by the Indians. In 1770, the settlements extended along the banks of the river for more than ten miles, both above and below Detroit. Large quantities of Indian corn, oats and wheat were raised, and the district of country was noted for its fine pasturage. The town, at this time, consisted of about one hundred houses, a range of barracks, and a spacious parade, at the south end. The main defence of the town was a line of pickets, driven firmly into the ground, and lined with palisades, protected with bastions. In the bastions were small cannon just sufficient to cope with the Indians, or an enemy unprovided with artillery. The garrison usually consisted of about two hundred men.

The Revolutionary war had another effect on Detroit and other distant posts than to again subject them to annoyances from the Indians, which, however, never became serious. The success of the American arms at Vincennes in 1778, and the prospect that the victorious troops would continue their career westward to Detroit, induced Major Le Nault, the commanding officer, to construct a fort on the rising ground or second terrace, outside of the palisades and back of the city, which was known as Fort Le Nault. By the treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, it was claimed that Michigan was within American bounds. Questions, however, arose between the governments which caused mutual dissatisfaction, and when Washington sent Baron Steuben to Quebec, to make arrangements for the transfer of the forts on the lakes, he was informed by the English governor of Canada that the surrender of the posts could not take place at that time, and was refused passports to Niagara and Detroit.

The following interesting description of the town, as it was in 1793, is given by the Rev. O. M. Spencer, who was then a lad of about thirteen. While at play in Cincinnati, he was captured by a band of Miami Indians and carried to their village. By request of Washington, he was ran-somed by Col. England, commandant at Detroit, and, after spending several months with his hospitable English friends, he reached his home in safety. Young Spencer kept a journal during his captivity, which forms the basis of a published narrative, from which the following is an extract:

“Detroit,” says Mr. Spencer, “was then a small town, containing only wooden buildings, but few of which were well finished, surrounded by high pickets, inclosing an area of probably half a mile square, about one-third of which, along the bank of the river, as the Strait was called, was covered with houses. There were, I think, four narrow streets running parallel with the river, and intersected by four or five more at right angles. At each end of the second street was an entrance into the city, secured by heavy wooden gates. North of this street, at the west end of the town, was a space two hundred feet square, inclosed on a part of two sides with palisades, within which a row of handsome two-story barracks, for the accommodation of the officers, occupied the west side, and buildings of the same height for the soldiers’ quarters, stood on the north and a part of the east side. The open space was occupied as a parade-ground, where the troops were every day exercised by the Adjutant. In the northwest corner of the large area, inclosed with pickets, on ground slightly elevated, stood the fort, separated from the houses by an esplanade, and surrounded first by an abatis of tree-tops about four feet high, having the butts of the limbs sharpened and projecting outward; then by a deep ditch, in the centre of which were high pickets; and then by a row of light palisades, seven or eight feet long, projecting horizontally from the glacis.

“The fort itself, covering not more than half an acre of ground, was square, having a bastion at each angle, with parapets and ramparts so high as to entirely shelter the quarters within, which were bomb-proof. Its entrance was on the south side, facing the river, over a drawbridge, and through a covered way, over which, on each side, were long iron cannon, carrying twenty-four pound shots, and which the officers called the ‘British lions,’ while on each of the other sides were planted two, and on each bastion four cannon of various caliber—six, nine, and twelve-pounders. By the side of the gate, near the end of the officers’ barracks, was a twenty-four pounder; and, for the protection of the south side of the town, there were two small batteries of cannon on the bank of the river.

“The fort was garrisoned by a company of artillery, under the command of Capt. Spear, while two companies of infantry, and one of grenadiers of the twenty-fourth (Col. England’s regiment), were quartered in the barracks; the balance of the regiment was at Michilimackinac and other northern posts.

“In the spring of 1793, there was anchored in the river in front of the town, three brigs of about two hundred tons each—the Chippewa and the Ottawa, new vessels, carrying eight guns each the Dunmore, an old vessel of six guns, and a sloop, the Felicity, of about one hundred tons, armed with only two swivels, all belonging to his Majesty George III., and commanded by Commodore Grant. There were, besides, several merchantmen, sloops, and schooners, the property of private individuals."

The decisive campaign of Gen. Anthony Wayne disheartened the savages and terminated, for a time, the frontier troubles. By the stipulations of the treaty of Greenville, made in August, 1795, Detroit and all the Northwest became the undisputed property of the United States. Detroit was soon after evacuated by the British; and, in 1796, was garrisoned by detachments from Wayne's army, under command of Captain Porter, by whom the first American flag that ever waved over the walls of Detroit, was unfurled. From this date there was a steady and gradual accession to the number of its inhabitants. Joseph Campau, Robert Gonier, George Moniot, Jean Baptiste le Duke, Gabriel Côte, Jacques Allaird, Conrad Ten Eyck, Hugh Martin and Meldrum and Park, comprised the whole list of Detroit merchants in the year 1798. The year following Stephen Mack, the first American shipper in Detroit, appeared and erected a small building in the heart of the town, where he spread out his goods, among which was a large quantity of the plaid cotton fabric called "apron check," which he disposed of at the price of a dollar per yard to his Indian, French, English and Canadian customers.

On the 11th of June, 1805, a fire broke out at mid-day in the center of the town, and at nightfall there remained, within the limits of the stockade, but a small house on St. Aum street, and a brick storehouse near the river. All else was a vast scene of smouldering ruins. The day after the destruction of Detroit, Gov. Hull and other Territorial officers arrived. In place of a flourishing town, they found a mass of smoking ruins and an assemblage of homeless and disheartened inhabitants, with no other shelter than canvass tents or rude huts, erected from such materials as they could obtain. The aged and infirm were sheltered by the hospitable farmers on each side of the river, and Fort Shelby afforded accommodations for the Governor and his companions. The work of rebuilding soon began, the first house in the new town being erected by Peter Audrain, Secretary of the Territory. On the 10th of October, an official statement of the destruction of the town of Detroit and the impoverished condition of the inhabitants, was made by Gov. Hull, and at the next session of Congress, the following act was passed for the relief of the sufferers, and with a view to encouraging immigration:

“Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled: That the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan shall be, and they are hereby authorized to lay out a town, including the whole of the old town of Detroit and ten thousand acres adjacent, excepting such parts as the President of the United States shall direct to be reserved for the use of the military department, and shall hear, examine, and finally adjust all claims to lots therein, and give deeds for the same. And to every person, who, not owing or professing allegiance to any foreign power, and being above the age of seventeen years, did, on the eleventh day of June, one thousand eight hundred and five, when the old town of Detroit was burnt, own or inhabit a house in the same, there shall be granted by the governor and the judges aforesaid, or any three of them, and where they shall judge most proper, a lot not exceeding the quantity of five thousand square feet.

“§ 2. And be it further enacted, that the land remaining of the said ten thousand acres, after satisfying claims provided for by the preceding section, shall be disposed of by the governor and judges aforesaid, at their discretion, to the best advantage, who are hereby authorized to make deeds to purchasers thereof, and the proceeds of the lands so disposed of, shall be applied by the governor and judges aforesaid, toward building a courthouse and jail in the town of Detroit; and the said governor and judges are required to make report to Congress, in writing, of their proceedings under this act.”

The “Journal of the Proceedings of the Board of Governor and Judges of the Territory of Michigan,” contains the following record:

“Pursuant to the above act of Congress, the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan convened at the house of Governor Hull, on Saturday, September sixth, one thousand eight hundred and six. Present, William Hull, Governor; Augustus B. Woodward, Chief Judge, and Frederick Bates, Senior Associate Judge. Peter Audrain was continued legislative secretary, and Asa Jones was appointed sergeant-at-arms, with a compensation of twenty-five dollars a month. After the business of organizing had been dispatched, the act of Congress was read, and referred to Judge Woodward as committee, with instructions to report from time to time, by bill or otherwise.”

On the 13th of September, 1806, a bill was passed incorporating Detroit into a city, and also making provisions for laying out the city on a magnificent plan, said to be similar to that of Byzantium. Jefferson avenue, and other streets near the river, were immediately surveyed, and early the year following the whole survey was completed. During the winter of 1805-6, the Legislative Board had been engaged in establishing a more efficient judiciary system, and in May, 1806, the first code of laws for the Territory of Michigan was adopted and published.

These laws, with the act of incorporation and plan of the city of Detroit, and the "act incorporating the Bank of Detroit," were approved by Congress at its next session. The existence of the bank was brief, its charter being revoked by Congress in 1809. The claims of the inhabitants of the old town, caused the Governor and Judges great difficulty, but they at last succeeded in adjusting the claims to the satisfaction of all parties. In 1707, a substantial stockade was constructed around the young city, on account of threatening movements among the Indians, which continued for several years, and somewhat retarded the growth of Detroit. In 1811, hostilities began on the Wabash, the Indians being urged on by the Prophet and Tecumseh, who had formed a league among the tribes, to drive the Americans east of the Alleghanies, and, of course, included in his plan, the destruction of Detroit.

On the 18th of June, 1812, an act was passed by the Congress of the United States, declaring war against Great Britain. In anticipation of such an event, Gen. Hull was appointed commander-in-chief of the forces in the Northwest, and arrived in Detroit on the 5th of July, with an army of fifteen hundred men, commanded by Cols. Cass, Finely, Miller, and McArthur. Four days after his arrival, General Hull received the following orders from the Secretary of War: "Should the force under your command be equal to the enterprise, and should it be consistent with the safety of your own post, you will take possession of Malden, and extend your conquests as circumstances will allow." The American army, whose numbers were greatly increased by the Michigan militia, crossed the Detroit river July 12th, and encamped at Sandwich. Here General Hull issued a proclamation, urging the inhabitants to enroll themselves under the American banner.

After remaining inactive at Sandwich for nearly a month, Gen. Hull was intimidated by reports of an advance of a large body of British troops, and ignominiously re-crossed the Detroit river on the 9th of August, without having made an attack upon Malden, in accordance with the wishes of his whole army, who were anxious to attack the enemy. Before returning to Detroit, Colonels Cass and Miller, by a successful attack upon the enemy's advance, demonstrated the willingness and ability of their men to push their conquests, if an opportunity were given. Col. Proctor, the British commander, reached Malden July 29th, and immediately inaugurated a series of operations, the object of which was to cut off the communications of Gen. Hull with Ohio, from whence he received his supplies. Having by his measures stopped the American stores at the river Raisin, he next defeated the insufficient band of two hundred men, under Van Horn, sent to escort them, and so far withstood an attack by Col. Miller, with five hundred men, as to induce Gen. Hull to recall the remnant of the victorious band, though it had routed the enemy, who were driven across the river, leaving the Americans masters of the field.

Gen. Brock arrived at Malden on the 14th of August, and, the day following, moved up to Sandwich, and summoned Gen. Hull to surrender. The American commander answered, "I have no other reply to make, than that I am prepared to meet any force which may be at your disposal." The enemy at once opened fire upon the fort, which was returned with considerable effect. Early in the morning of the 16th, the British, under cover of an armed vessel, crossed the river without opposition, landed at Springwell, and moved in solid column along the bank of the river toward Detroit. When about a mile distant, the enemy halted for breakfast, when suddenly, an order was given by Gen. Hull, for the detachment posted without the fort to ambush the British, to retire within the walls. This order was received with surprise and indignation by the army. Soon after, a white flag floated above the fort, which was surrendered to an inferior force, without a blow being struck. The regular troops were surrendered as prisoners of war, and the public property given up. Thus terminated one of the most ignominious events in the history of our country.

For his most unaccountable conduct, the imbecile Governor and General was tried for treason and cowardice. The court gave a verdict of acquitted on the first count, but condemned him on the second. He received sentence of death, but was pardoned by the President. Detroit remained in the possession of the British until the 23d of September, when the American force, under Gen. Harrison, again unfurled the stars and stripes over its walls.

The following interesting facts were narrated by Mrs. McCarthy, one of the daughters of Peter Audrain, first secretary of Michigan territory, who resided in Detroit at the time, to Mr. E. H. Sheldon :

"Detroit in 1812, scarcely deserved the name of town, for it was in reality, but a small village. The old town had been burned to the ground, and the inhabitants were obliged to build such houses as their means would allow, and but few of these were either elegant or convenient. Atwater was then the principal street, and the dwellings there were quite compact. A few houses were scattered here and there on the other streets; and around the whole town—small, compared with its present dimensions—was a stockade of tall pickets, as a protection from the Indians. Between the town and the fort there was no stockade, but the space was laid out in a beautiful esplanade, where the troops were drilled and exercised. Then came the fort, with its grass-covered sides, surrounded by a deep moat. All around the top of the fort, on the inside, were placed the cannon, alike for destruction and defense. On the west side of the fort was the cantonment, built around a neat court, with gravel walks and shade-trees. Two sides of the cantonment were dwellings of the officers' and soldiers' families, and the other two sides were barracks. At the west end of the town, near the gate of the stockade, stood the citadel, a strong blockhouse, used also for a guard-house. Along the river, above and below the city, were the farms of the inhabitants, mostly French, some of whom were devoted to the British, and some to the American interests.

“The morning before the surrender, was sultry in the extreme. The sky was overspread with a thick haze, not a breath of wind lifted the drooping foliage, and the straggling rays of sunlight which now and then pierced through the gloom, were pale and sickly. Humanity seemed, for once, in unison with nature—listless and unhappy. Men gathered in groups about the market-place, and talked gloomily of the war, and their own future prospects; old women rocked to and fro, recalled their superstitions, and prophesied evil at hand; children were uncommonly peevish; and the usual bustling housewife, languid and depressed, shrank from the burden of her daily duties.

“We had scarcely breakfasted, when the clatter of a horse's hoofs were heard along the streets, and the stentorian voice of an officer warned the inhabitants to seek a place of safety, as the batteries recently thrown up at Sandwich, would probably soon open their fire upon the town. Immediately, all was panic and confusion; women bustling about, packing their valuables for removal; men running to and fro, seeking a retreat for those dearer to them than life; crying infants clinging to their half-distracted mothers, and older children everywhere but where they should be, making the town a second Babel. About noon, the inhabitants began to leave the town; but, alas! where is safety in the midst of the stirring scenes of war? Our enemies were near us with their missiles of destruction; the forest swarmed with Indians, professing friendliness—yet who would vouch for savage integrity, should the enemy gain the ascendancy? A deep ravine on the ‘Cass Farm,’ a short distance below the city, then owned by General McDonald, seemed to offer the best security, and there the women and children were assembled, with a few of the sterner sex for protectors.

“The cannonading commenced at four o'clock in the afternoon, and continued at intervals during the night, keeping us in constant alarm, but doing little injury on either side. Often, while we sat huddled together in the ravine, did the ill-directed balls from the enemy's cannon, plow through the orchard, tearing up the ground, but, fortunately, doing no other damage. A few shells also burst near us, harmlessly. Near midnight, those remaining in the ravine were persuaded to remove to a large stone root-house in the orchard, that we might be protected from the chilly dews of the night.

"My health had been failing for some time previous, and the fright, fatigue and bad air of the crowded root-house, brought on an illness so violent that my friends were obliged to convey me to the dwelling house, the basement of which we found already crowded. I was placed in an upper room, a most dangerous position, as, it being nearly daybreak, the firing was more frequent. Alarmed for the safety of my two children, who, with my mother, had accompanied me, I prevailed on my mother to leave me alone, and seek a more secure place for herself and my little ones. My father and husband were at the fort, and, though my wants were all supplied, none else were willing to peril their own lives by remaining with me, as their presence would be no safeguard to my life. Hour after hour I passed thus alone, listening to the booming cannon, and then starting and shrieking as a ball whizzed by the house, sometimes feeling almost sure that it was a mark for the enemy, and thinking perhaps the next shot would terminate my existence.

"Day dawned at length, and the cannonading ceased. Presently my mother came to tell me that the 'red coats' were crossing the river at Springwells. 'Now,' said she, 'we shall be between two fires, and where to go for safety I cannot tell.' Her voice trembled with emotion, but her tearless eye flashed forth the determination of a resolute heart. She seated herself by a window that looked out on the beautiful Detroit. Unlike yesterday, not a cloud appeared on all the face of Heaven; the cool breeze came sweeping up from its lake-bathings, rippling the river, and refreshing humanity. The glad song of birds hailed the rising sun, and the green herbage and bright-eyed flowers nodded assent to their hymn of praise. But the reveille at the fort broke harshly on the ear amid the peaceful beauty of nature. It proclaimed the fearful truth that, for glory or mammon, man will murder his fellow-man, desolate the homes of the happy, and even himself rush into the presence of his Judge. The river below us was thickly dotted with canoes and barges, filled with scarlet-clad soldiery, and the reflected sunbeams flashed from burnished implements of war. There was a bustle at the fort, but no forming of troops on the esplanade. At length a cannon was placed at the west gate, and small detachments of troops were stationed here and there, behind the strong picket-fences that lined the road-side from Springwells to Detroit. The British troops, having breakfasted only a mile below us, formed and commenced marching toward the town.

"'What ails our men!' exclaimed my mother, as the troops continued to advance; 'why don't they fire upon them?'

"'Perhaps they might kill us,' I suggested.

"'We might as well be killed,' she replied, 'as to fall into the power of the "red-coats" and Indians. But we must try to find a safe place than this, for if Gen. Hull is not a coward, we shall have bloody work to-day.'

"Supported by my mother, I succeeded in reaching the foot of the stairs, where my father, who had obtained leave of absence from the fort for half an hour, met us, and, taking me in his arms, carried me to our old retreat in the ravine. After telling me that my husband was on duty at one of the outposts, he returned to the fort. Kind friends made me a bed on the cold, damp earth, my children were brought to me, and, when all was done for my comfort that could be, my restless mother again sought the house, to watch the movements of the belligerents.

"A flag of truce was sent from the fort across the river, and presently one of Gen. Brock's aids galloped by, toward the fort, also bearing the white flag. After a short absence he returned, and was sent a second time, when he was met outside of the gate by a deputation from the fort. Soon after, to our utter dismay, the American banner was hauled down, and a white flag, in token of surrender, run up in its place. In the mean time orders had been issued to recall the detachments, and Capt. Snelling, who stood at the cannon by the gate, with a lighted match in his hand to fire the gun, the report of which had been agreed upon as a signal of attack by those in ambuscade, had the match struck from his hand by a superior officer, who, pointing to the flag of surrender, told him not to fire, at the peril of his life.

"Scarcely were the terms of capitulation signed, before the British took possession of the town and fort, and an officer rode through the lanes and orchards, assuring the trembling inhabitants of protection from the Indians, who were swarming in vast numbers in the rear of the British troops. There was one universal burst of indignation from officers, soldiers, and inhabitants, at this disgraceful surrender, this stain on our national honor. Gen. Hull's son, more brave than his father, raved and swore most fearfully. My father saw many of the officers break their swords, and weep over their disgrace like little children. * * * * *

"It was a long, weary year to us poor inhabitants, and a joyful time when Gen. Harrison came to the rescue. The news of his approach was first brought by an old citizen of Detroit, whom we had suspected of being a tory, because he was allowed greater privileges than others who had not taken up arms. * * * * *

"Gen. Harrison and his army soon arrived. The Kentucky soldiers, who formed a part of the force, were tall, robust men, clad in blue hunting-shirts, red belts, and blue trowsers, fringed with red. This singular uniform gave them a semi-savage appearance. The fort was surrendered after a mere show of resistance; the American flag again floated in triumph over the spot where, a year before, it had been so shamefully dishonored, and our joy was now as enthusiastic as then our indignation was unbounded."

This ends the Early History of Detroit. At some future time, we shall take up the narrative, and continue it to the present date.

EDWARD ORR,

IMPORTER AND JOBBER OF

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS!

No. 146 Jefferson Avenue,

DETROIT, - - MICHIGAN.

Merchants will find in this establishment, every article in all Departments of Foreign and Domestic Dry Goods, required to complete an assortment, and at less than New York Jobbing prices, for cash.

Country Merchants who have been in the habit of making periodical journeys to New York for the purchase of dry goods, after returning from one of their trips, should call at the establishment of EDWARD ORR, and ascertain the fact, that they could have had their entire bills duplicated at New York prices, and that their heavy outlay for freight and personal expenses, was so much money needlessly expended. Many of our shrewdest merchants, who have already ascertained the foregoing fact, now purchase their entire stock of this firm, and are, in consequence, realizing a much better profit on their goods than if bought in New York. At the store of Mr. ORR, there can always be found a very large and beautiful stock of the most fashionable goods in the market, while the inducements held out to purchasers are not surpassed by any similar house in the country.—Editor.

MORHOUS & DEWEY,

BUILDERS

MANUFACTURERS OF

Sashes, Doors, Blinds, Window Frames & Mouldings,

WOODBIDGE STREET,

Between Beaubien and St. Antoine Streets,

DETROIT.

We know of no firm in the City of Detroit that deserves and enjoys a higher reputation than that of Messrs. MORHOUS & DEWEY, whose card appears above. By the display of a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality, a large and increasing trade has been built up, and as all those who ever trade once with the firm have the strongest reasons for continuing their patronage, it is certain to grow in popular favor. From personal knowledge we can conscientiously recommend this house as one of the best in the country, and bespeak for it the liberal patronage of the public generally.—Editor.

LAW BOOKS.

My Stock embraces all the Elementary and Text Books in use or demand for this section, and can supply the Reports of any of the States on short notice, and on more favorable terms than any other parties.

STATIONERY.

In this line I aim to keep the best quality offered in the Market. I purchase exclusively from Manufacturers, and thereby save to my patrons the profits of Commission Houses.

BLANK BOOKS.

I have one of the most complete Binderies in the State, and can manufacture to order any thing in the line on short notice.

LITHOGRAPHY.

My facilities for supplying any thing in this line are now complete.

DRAFTS, NOTES, CERTIFICATES,
LETTER HEADS, CIRCULARS,
BILL HEADS, MAPS, CARDS, ETC.

I will deliver to parties in this city at same or less price than can be obtained at the East.

BLANKS.

I have constantly in stock over 240 different Forms, all of which are carefully revised by competent parties, and will always be found reliable and correct, and adapted to the use of Lawyers, Attorneys, Magistrates, County Clerks, Judge of Probates, Sheriffs and Business Men generally, and uniformly printed on a superior quality of paper.

The undersigned is grateful for past favors, and trusts he will merit a continuance of the same, and aims to make his establishment, in the future as well as the past, the Head Quarters of the State for all having business in this line.

Very Respectfully,

DETROIT, 1862.

HALLOCK'S CLOTHING EMPORIUM, No. 168 Jefferson Ave., DETROIT.

One of the Oldest and Heaviest Clothing Establishments in the West.

Established in 1882.

On hand at all times, a complete assortment of

READY-MADE CLOTHING!

All manufactured under our own immediate inspection, and warranted to give satisfaction. Also, a large and complete assortment of

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS. CLOTHS, CASSIMERES & VESTINGS,

All of which shall be sold at WHOLESALE OR RETAIL, at Prices UNIFORMLY LOW, and on favorable terms.

H. HALLOCK.

Among the oldest and most substantial of our City business houses is that of H. HALLOCK, at No. 168 Jefferson Avenue, established upwards of thirty years since. Owing to the length of time Mr. H. has been in the business, he is enabled to offer unusual and extraordinary inducements to both wholesale and retail purchasers. All the goods offered at this establishment are manufactured under the immediate supervision of the proprietor, who spares no pains to render them worthy the confidence and patronage of the public, and so great is his confidence in their superiority that he warrants every article that leaves his store. His prices are always down to the lowest rate, and no greater price is ever asked for any article than a living per centage on the actual cost. Mr. H. also keeps constantly on hand a very large assortment of gentlemen's furnishing goods, in great variety, and of the best quality. Gentlemen who require an addition to their wardrobe should not fail to pay a visit to the elegant store of Mr. H. Hallock.—Editor.

MICHIGAN AGENCY

FOR LILLIE'S

CELEBRATED

SAFES & LOCKS

THESE SAFES AND LOCKS
ARE WARRANTED FOR TEN YEARS!

SAFES OF OTHER MANUFACTURE FOR SALE
AT LESS THAN HALF PRICE.

Being the only Agent Mr. LILLIE has in Michigan, I have constantly on hand a large assortment of his combined

Chilled and Wrought Iron, Fire and Burglar-Proof Safes,

Which are fastened with his combination lock, without key or key-hole. I also have on hand and for sale

LILLIE'S FIRE-PROOF SAFES

Which are warranted superior to any other manufactured, at 25 per cent. less than any other make of Safe can be bought when new. I will sell Safes of other manufacture, which I have taken in exchange for Lillie's, at less than half price.

I will exchange the New Locks for the Old Locks, at half-price.

I can furnish Banks with Vault Doors and Frames, Burglar-Proof Safes, Pick and Powder Proof-Locks, and Burglar-Proof Money Chests, to go in Fire-Proof Safes.

S. R. WOOLLEY,
At C. & A. IVES, Detroit.

I am prepared hereafter to guarantee my Safes and Locks combined, to those who may purchase my work, and if they yield their contents to burglars or the ravages of fire, I will furnish new Safes and Locks that will be satisfactory, or refund the money paid for them.

MANUFACTURERS & JOBBERS OF

BOOTS & SHOES!

No. 25 Woodward Ave.,

DETROIT, - MICHIGAN.

H. P. BALDWIN,
GEO. W. ROSE,

SAMUEL P. WILCOX,
J. M. JOHNSON.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Messrs. H. P. Baldwin & Co., wholesale dealers in Boots and Shoes, No. 25 Woodward Avenue, have one of the largest and most complete Boot and Shoe Houses in the Northwest, and will rank second to none in the country. The senior partner, Mr. H. P. Baldwin, commenced business in this City in 1837, and has continued uninterruptedly to the present time. In 1857, Messrs. Wilcox and Rose were admitted as partners, since which time the style of the firm has been H. P. Baldwin & Co. The firm occupy four floors and the cellar of the fine brick building No. 25 Woodward, a few doors below the corner of Jefferson Avenue, where they keep constantly on hand an immense stock of every description and quality of boots and shoes, together with dressed calf-skins, morocco and sole leather, forming, as we have stated above, one of the most complete stocks of the kind to be found in the entire West. From 50 to 100 shoemakers are constantly employed in filling special orders for the firm. Country dealers should not fail to examine Messrs. H. P. Baldwin & Co.'s stock before leaving Detroit.—Editor.

DIRECTORS:

J. OWEN, L. CASS, JR., B. WIGHT, C. VAN HUSAN, C. H. BUHL.

THE DETROIT LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.—The majority of the patrons of the Detroit City Directory are probably not aware of the extent and importance of the business carried on in this establishment. The works, located on Larned, from Third to Fourth streets, are owned by a joint stock company, established in 1854, of which the following gentlemen are officers: JOHN OWEN, President; T. S. CHRISTIE, Secretary and Treasurer; J. OWEN, L. CASS, JR., B. WIGHT, C. VAN HUSAN and C. H. BUHL, Directors. Although constructed more especially for the manufacture of Locomotives, the works have ample facilities for turning out High and Low Pressure Engines, Stationary, and for Steamboats and Propellers, Mining Engines, Boilers of all kinds, Kibbles, Iron Work, Castings and Machinery of almost every description. The company exercise unusual care in the selection of stock for boilers, and in obtaining the best workmen. The superintendent of this department of the company's works has had great experience in his vocation, for many years having had charge of one of the largest shops in the city of New York, principally, and successfully, engaged in marine and boiler work. The manufactures of this firm have carried a reputation outside of Michigan, and even the merchants of Chicago, Milwaukee and other cities have elevating engines and other machinery in operation that were manufactured at the Detroit Locomotive Works. We congratulate our citizens upon their public spirit in establishing and sustaining an industrial enterprise of such magnitude.—Editor.

GEORGE KIRBY,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

LEATHER, HIDES, OIL,

SHOE FINDINGS,

TANNERS' AND CURRIERS' TOOLS, ETC.,

No. 33 Woodward Avenue,

CASH PAID FOR HIDES. DETROIT.

At the establishment of Mr. Kirby will be found one of the largest stocks of Leather, Hides, Oils and Shoefindings in the North-west. Tanners, curriers and shoemakers can procure complete outfits of all articles used in their line by application as above.—Editor.

M. MARTZ,

FASHIONABLE BOOT MAKER,

No. 220 Jefferson Avenue,

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

Gentlemen who have suffered the excruciating torture of tight and ill-fitting boots, will readily appreciate the elegant workmanship of the artist whose card adorns this page. Mr. M. has an enviable reputation among gentlemen of taste, throughout the City, and he well deserves it, as nothing but the most superior work is ever turned out from his establishment.—Editor.

DETROIT PLASTER MILL.

J. B. HINCHMAN,

EMBROIDERIES,

WORSTEDS, CHENEILLES,

FLOSSES, TRIMMINGS AND HOSIERY.

ALSO, MANUFACTURERS OF

Children's Carriages and Carts,

No. 70 Woodward Ave.,

DETROIT, - - MICHIGAN.

One of the most difficult tasks in this life is that of deciding upon a suitable present for a friend or child; but in Detroit all this perplexity can be avoided by paying a visit to the beautiful Bazaar of G. DOELTZ & BROTHER, No. 70 Woodward Avenue, where can always be found an enormous stock of toys of every conceivable description, children's carriages, embroideries, collars, worsteds, etc., in short, a beautiful selection of goods suitable for presents for any age, sex or condition of life. The goods are many of them imported by Messrs G. D. & Brother direct from Germany, and as they were purchased at the lowest rates in European markets, can be offered at prices that will defy competition. Ladies desiring to procure elaborate embroideries at the lowest prices, should call and examine the large stock constantly kept on hand at this establishment.—Editor.

BENJAMIN B. NOYES,

WILLIAM R. NOYES.

Among the heaviest hardware houses in the Western States, is that of Messrs. B. B. & W. R. Noyes, 86 Woodward Avenue, Detroit. The firm now occupy one of the largest stores in town, and have on hand an immense stock of general hardware goods, including hundreds of articles not enumerated in the advertisement above. Country merchants who have been in the habit of procuring their stocks in New York and other eastern cities, should pay a visit to this establishment, and learn the fact that they can have as good a stock to select from, and can purchase to as good advantage here as they can in the East. Many of the finer articles of cutlery offered for sale, were imported by the Messrs. Noyes, direct from Europe, expressly for the trade, and for price and quality set competition at defiance.

OFFICE AND YARD,

Corner of Randolph and Atwater Sts.,

DETROIT, Mich.

Messrs. E. W. LADD & Co. have unusual facilities for furnishing every description of dressed slate and marble for roofs, table tops, mantles, &c., and as they keep a large stock constantly on hand, they are prepared to fill all orders at the shortest possible notice. Their new and beautiful Encaustic Tiles, for hotel and office floors, are coming rapidly into favor, and in consequence of their cheapness are being introduced into dwellings and buildings of all descriptions. Persons contemplating the erection of houses should pay a visit to the yard of E. W. Ladd & Co., and examine their stock on hand —Editor.

EVERY VESSEL SUPPLIED WITH ITS OWN TUG.

IVES' YAWL BOAT OAR PROPELLER,

PATENTED, APRIL, 1861.

---

This new and successful invention, has been got up solely for propulsion of small boats by means of machinery connected with the oar, handling them in the same mode as by hand, with much greater power; got up with comparative trifling expense, simple and portable, and sooner or later will be unanimously used. Each vessel being provided with one for its own immediate use.

GEORGE IVES, Patentee,
Detroit, Michigan.

---

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

IVES' IMPROVED DITCHING MACHINE,

PATENTED, AUGUST, 1861.

---

The above machine surpasses all others ever brought into use, by the extra amount of service it performs, besides its efficiency otherwise, and durability and cheapness.

GEORGE IVES, Patentee, Detroit.

IVES' PATENT SAW-HORSE.

---

By this improvement, twenty-five per cent. more wood can be sawed than by any other in use. It affords, withal, a healthful exercise, either for day laborers or those who saw to promote their health. Still another important consideration is the fact that five times the amount charged for it will be saved in the wear and tear of clothing.

B R I T T A N ' S

CONTINUOUS COPPER STRIP

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS!

THESE CONDUCTORS ARE CONSTRUCTED OF

WHOLE COPPER STRIPS,

Of any desired length, width and thickness, for which Letters Patent were issued by the United States Government, November 6th, 1860.

THE UPPER TERMINUS CONSISTS OF A COPPER TUBE,

Made firm and strong, surmounted by a Copper Electro-Plated or Gilded Branch Point.

Superiority is claimed for these Conductors for the following reasons:

1. They are formed of the best material ever used for this purpose, viz., pure COLD ROLLED Lake Superior Copper, not liable to rust, and having eight times the conducting capacity of iron.

2. They present a large, uniform and unbroken surface for any required length, width and thickness, forming a perfectly continuous line of transit for the electric fluid.

3. The conducting capacity can be augmented with great facility, either above or below the surface of the earth, by simply increasing the number or width of the strips, thus adapting them, in an economical point of view, to all classes of buildings, high or low.

4. The method of fastening is exceedingly simple and reliable—the strips, being very flexible and strong, can be neatly and durably attached to church-steeple, towers, flag-staffs, masts of vessels, and buildings of all kinds.

5. The necessity of insulation is entirely superseded, there being no danger of the electric fluid ever leaving so good a conducting material as Copper well connected with the ground, for any other substance contained in the building. Nor is heat ever evolved by the passage of electricity over a good conductor to cause the least danger of setting fire to the building, however combustible it may be.

6. They are the most economical Conductors ever offered to the public. The first cost to the purchaser does not vary much from the price usually paid for the iron rod, whilst, on account of the properties of the material, the mode of construction and attachment, they are vastly more durable and less liable to get out of repair.

Permanent arrangements have been made with a perfectly reliable Manufacturing Company to furnish these Conductors in large or small quantities, on short notice, for cash or approved credit, to all parties holding the territorial right.

Good inducements are offered to reliable parties to engage in the wholesale or retail trade. Local Agents wanted. Applications, enclosing stamp, will receive prompt attention, if addressed to

N. BRITTAN, Patentee, Detroit, Mich.

N. B.—Orders respectfully solicited from the citizens of Detroit and vicinity.

Office at the Hat, Cap and Fur Store of T. H. Armstrong, 176 Jefferson Avenue. Residence, 558 Woodward Avenue.

The largest assortment of wire and wire cloth in the State of Michigan, is that of the Detroit Wire Works, Russell House Block, No. 102 Woodward Avenue, WILLIAM SNOW, proprietor. Here can be found any variety of brass, copper, iron and steel wire, together with all styles of wire cloths. Mill owners can here find the celebrated "anchor brand" of bolting cloths, burr mill stones, and every description of mill furnishing goods. Mr. Snow has also a large assortment of hardware, nails, glass, pumps, lead pipe, &c.—Editor.

PROF. J. FINN,
 206 Jefferson Ave., up stairs, DETROIT.

All persons afflicted with Premature Grayness, Baldness, Nervous Headache, Excessive Loosening of the Hair, Intense Itching Sensation of the Scalp, Scurf, Dandruff, &c., should call on Prof. J. FINN. He will warrant a cure in all cases he undertakes. The above fact is well established by hundreds of ladies and gentlemen who have obtained by his treatment as perfect heads of hair, as vigorous and healthy as when in early youth, after some had been gray, and others bald, for a number of years.

Ladies living in this city attended at their residences, for treatment, twice a week, Mondays and Thursdays, until a satisfactory head of hair shall have grown out, or a permanent cure effected.

Gentlemen attended at the office, for treatment, at least once a day, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, from 8 A.M. to 6 P.M.

The Restorative is for sale only by the proprietor, and can be forwarded by Express to any part of the country. Full directions accompany each package. N. B.—For further particulars see his Treatise on the Human Hair. Call and get one.

BIDDLE & STANTON,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
COLLECTION, TAX AND INSURANCE AGENCY.

Business attended to in any part of the State.

OFFICE, CORNER OF JEFFERSON AND WOODWARD AVENUES

W. S. BIDDLE. DETROIT, - MICHIGAN. S. K. STANTON.

☞ We know of no description of business more important and useful than that in which Messrs. BIDDLE & STANTON are now engaged—the collection of bills, and the payment of taxes for non-residents. It is too often the case that men of limited means and of small legal ability commence the business of collection agents, and as a natural consequence, it is not unfrequently the case that more difficulty is experienced in obtaining money from the collectors than from the original debtors. It therefore becomes a matter of vast importance to secure, if possible, for this delicate position, men not only of acknowledged legal talent, but of undoubted responsibility. Answering perfectly to the foregoing description is the firm whose name heads this page; from personal experience we pronounce it a firm in every way deserving of the confidence and patronage of the public. Messrs. Biddle & Stanton conduct, in connection with their Law and Collection Agency, a general Insurance Business, life, fire and marine, and have made arrangements to act as agents for several of the largest and best companies in New York and other places. Non-residents and citizens who desire the services of capable and responsible agents, of the highest respectability, should make application as above.—Editor.

No. 80 WOODWARD AVENUE,

WAREHOUSE No. 10 LARNED STREET, EAST,

DETROIT, { J. S. FARRAND.
A. SHELEY.
WM. C. WILLIAMS. } MICHIGAN.

There is probably no house west of New York City that enjoys a reputation more extended and enviable than that of Messrs. FARRAND, SHELEY & Co., of No. 80 Woodward Avenue, Detroit. For more than twenty years this concern has been in successful operation, and during all that time has maintained its position as one of the most enterprising, liberal and substantial firms in the country. The partners are men of large experience in the trade, and in the importation and purchase of their goods exercise a discrimination that secures to their customers the very best articles at the very lowest rates. The Drugs kept on hand at this establishment are preferred by retailers to those procured direct from Eastern cities, while the price at which they are offered effectually defies competition. City and country druggists, physicians and others in want of stocks of Drugs and Chemicals, should make it a point to call at the store of Messrs. F. S. & Co., before making their purchases elsewhere. The celebrated Fairbanks' Scales are also sold by this firm, at manufacturer's rates, and upwards of fifty different varieties are kept constantly on hand, at their warehouse, No. 10 Larned Street east. Country merchants in want of Groceries, Drugs, Paints, Oils, Glass, or Scales, can find no better place in the Western States at which to make their purchases than at the well known establishment of Messrs. Farrand, Sheley & Co.—Editor.

CHARLES ROOT.

SAM'L W. JOHNSON.

EDWIN S. BARBOUR.

The above firm is composed of three of the most enterprising and deserving young men in the city of Detroit, and by strict attention to business, and untiring efforts to satisfy the wants of their customers, they have succeeded in building up a trade second to none in the State. Their store is one of the largest and best in the country, while their stock of goods cannot be surpassed by any similar establishment in the West. Country merchants should never leave the city without giving the stock of Messrs. ROOT, JOHNSON & BARBOUR a thorough examination.—Editor.

SHERMAN HOUSE!

Corner of Clark & Randolph Sts., - CHICAGO.

P. B. ROBERTS, Proprietor.

The undersigned begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that the above named House was opened for business, as a FIRST CLASS METROPOLITAN HOTEL, on the first day of July, 1861.

Situated on the corner of Clark and Randolph Streets, in the very centre of business, immediately opposite Court House Square, which is the most eligible and pleasant site for a hotel in the city.

It is built of Athens Marble, at an enormous expense, and all of the modern Hotel Improvements have been introduced throughout, regardless of cost. The Halls, Parlors, Dining Rooms, and all other public apartments, are heated with steam. A plentiful supply of Private and Public Baths have been provided for the convenience of the guests. Hot and Cold Water is introduced into the Chambers. The entire building is lighted with Gas, and a handsome and most complete PASSENGER ELEVATOR, propelled by steam, is kept constantly in operation to convey guests from one floor to another, thereby obviating the objection of going up and down stairs.

This splendid Hotel is furnished in a magnificent and costly manner, with the latest and most fashionable styles of Furniture, from New York and Boston Houses. The Suits of Rooms and Private Parlors are all large, airy, and conveniently arranged. They cannot be surpassed, if equalled, by any other Hotel in the United States.

The Culinary Department of the SHERMAN HOUSE is under the management and direction of thoroughly competent and skilful persons. It is the intention of the Proprietors to set a table superior to that of any other Hotel in the Northwest.

We are pleased to be able to announce that S. HAWES, Esq., late of the Richmond House, in this city, is connected with this House, which is a guarantee to the old patrons of "the Richmond," and the public generally, that the SHERMAN HOUSE will be conducted in a manner that will be in advance, in every respect, of any other Hotel west of the Atlantic cities.

The proprietor of this magnificent establishment has painted and renovated it throughout, preparatory for Spring and Summer business, and it may now be considered one of the most inviting and luxurious Hotels on the continent.

Hoping that you may deem this House worthy of your patronage, where I will endeavor to make your sojourn with me pleasant and comfortable, I am

Very Respectfully Yours

P. B. ROBERTS, Proprietor.

DIRECTIONS

PUTTING UP FRUIT

IN THE

EXCELSIOR

SELF-SEALING JARS

Fill the Jar with fruit, make a syrup of sugar (find the amount of sugar below,) pour it into the jar before the fruit is cooked at all, fill the jar with the syrup to within one inch of the neck of it. Now take the rubber off the neck of the jar, put on the cover, then set the jar in a kettle of cold water, sufficient to half cover the jar; now put a cover on the kettle, and boil according to the directions below; take the jar out of the kettle, fill the jar full with boiling water, put on the rubber, with the smooth side to the glass; let the jar stand from 1 to 3 minutes, according to size, and seal up immediately. In putting on the cover turn it half around, and at the same time press it firmly down until the sissing noise stops, for when that stops it is very sure evidence that the sealing is perfect. When they get cold, stand them on the cover for 2 or 3 days, then set them away in a dark place. The jars are liable to break if they stand flat on the bottom of the kettle while boiling; to avoid that put a bit of wire or nail under each jar.

Boil Cherries moderately.....20 minutes.	Boil Pears, in halves, moderately.....30 minutes
" Raspberries "20 "	" Peaches "20 "
" Blackberries "20 "	" " whole, "30 "
" Plums "20 "	" Pine Apples sliced, 1-8 inch thick..30 "
" Strawberries "20 "	" Siberian Apple, whole,.....30 "
" Whortleberries "15 "

The amount of Sugar to a quart jar should be:

For Cherries5 ounces.	For Peaches,6 ounces.
" Raspberries,6 "	" Pear,6 "
" Lawton Blackberries,.....8 "	" Pine Apple,8 "
" Field Blackberries,6 "	" Siberian Apple,.....8 "
" Strawberries,8 "	" Plums,8 "
" Whortleberries,5 "

The best method of putting up Tomatoes is as follows:—Skin and slice, and boil in a kettle 30 minutes; then strain off the water through a cloth, put them back into the kettle, and boil gently 30 minutes, adding salt to the taste, taking care to stir them to prevent burning. Now fill the jars (which should be warm,) quite full, and seal up as before described. The jars should be filled moderately to prevent breaking.

None but sound fruit should be selected for preserving

Pears and Peaches should be dropped into cold water after pearing to prevent discoloring.

The above directions should be strictly followed.

To unseal the jar, stand it on the cover in warm water about 5 minutes, and then, with a knife or something of the kind, pry up the edge of the cover until some air is admitted, which releases the cover.

RUSSELL HOUSE

FRONTING CAMPUS MARTIUS,
DETROIT, - - - MICHIGAN.

L. T. MINOR, Proprietor.

For elegance and comfort, the Russell House is not surpassed by any hotel in the United States. It is superbly furnished, warmed by Steam, and lighted by Gas throughout. It is the largest hotel in Michigan, and has the advantage of a pleasant, airy location, in the very heart of the city, and will be conducted in a manner that cannot fail to commend it to the traveling public

It is with no ordinary feeling of pleasure, that we call the attention of our readers to the card at the head of this page. After an experience of five years, we feel fully competent to speak of the merits of this establishment, and with a thorough knowledge of hotels and hotel life throughout the Western States, we have no hesitation in pronouncing the RUSSELL HOUSE, of Detroit, the very best hotel in the north-west. For comfort, convenience, richness of appointments, and attention to the wants of visitors, it stands unrivalled. The proprietor, L. T. MINOR, Esq., devotes his personal attention to the comfort of his guests, and gives his own immediate supervision to all departments of the house. MR. CHITTENDEN, the gentlemanly clerk, is a model of courtesy and politeness, and to his kind attentions is due, in no small degree, the high reputation of the house. Travelers who desire all the comforts of a first class hotel, should patronize the Russell House.--Editor.

WILLIAMS'

Superior Stock,

PALE AND AMBER ALES!

BREWERY, CORNER OF SECOND AND ABBOTT STS.,

DETROIT, - - MICHIGAN.

The WILLIAMS' ALE stands second to none manufactured in this country, and for family use is very generally preferred to any other. The leading hotels of the city keep it on draught, while the best Physicians invariably recommend it to their patients as the purest and most strengthening Ale in use. No chemicals or drugs of any kind are used in the manufacture of this favorite beverage, it being compounded entirely of pure water, malt and hops.—Editor.

LARGE STOCK OF BOOTS & SHOES

Both of our own and Eastern manufacture, which are offered for sale, at wholesale and retail,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES.

We give special attention to work of our own manufacture, and hope to merit a large share of the public patronage.

THE CHEAPEST JEWELRY & SPECTACLE STORE IN THE WEST.

GEORGE

DEALER IN

FINE GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, SPECTACLES AND JEWELRY,

Watch Materials, Tools, Fancy Goods, Clock Trimmings, and Plated Ware. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry repaired in the best manner and on the shortest notice.

Tremendous stock of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry constantly on hand, with weekly arrivals of new styles, direct from the factories.

All kinds of Watchwork done for the trade at the lowest rate. To Country Merchants who pay cash, I offer superior inducements. "All goods warranted as represented."

P. S.--Save Your Eyes and Money.

I will sell Spectacles of the same quality at FIFTY PER CENT LESS THAN THE OPTICAL DEALERS IN DETROIT.

GEORGE SCHULER, 160 Jefferson Ave.

Aged persons and others of defective sight, should test the very superior quality of Spectacles offered for sale by GEORGE SCHULER, 160 Jefferson Avenue, the reputation of which extends throughout the western country. Mr. S. has made arrangements to procure from the most celebrated manufacturers of London and Paris, a constant supply of the best spectacles now in use, and is prepared to furnish them at retail, and to the trade, at prices that defy competition. His stock of fine Gold and Silver Watches and Jewelry, is unsurpassed by that of any house in the city.—Editor.

BOWKER & BLACKMUR,
MANUFACTURERS OF
ALE, PORTER AND BEER,
Michigan Avenue,
Hops and Malt for sale. DETROIT, Mich.

The reputation of the "MASON ALE" extends throughout the State, and we know that it is an unnecessary task to write anything in its favor. The new firm of BOWKER & BLACKMUR, having recently purchased this well-known Brewery, bring to it an amount of skill and experience that will add, if possible, to the celebrity of its productions. Mr. BOWKER was brewer for the late J. L. CAREW, for upwards of five years, and his friends will therefore readily acknowledge his superiority for Cream Ales. Mr. BLACKMUR, late with MASON, is the salesman of the concern, and from long experience in the business and intimate acquaintance with the wants of the trade, never fails to give perfect satisfaction to his customers.—Editor.

☞ Gentlemen need no longer suffer the annoyance of ill-fitting shirts. This indispensable garment can now be obtained, manufactured in the finest style, and with a perfect accuracy of fit, by applying as above. The Messrs. CHANDLER are gentlemen who have devoted years of patient study to the art of producing perfect-fitting shirts, and how admirably they have succeeded, we can ourselves, (as well as hundreds of others throughout the country,) from personal knowledge, cheerfully attest. As an instance of the satisfaction that Messrs. C. & Bro. invariably give, we will mention the fact that there are several officers of the United States Army, who order their shirts direct from this firm, to be sent to the camps of the Grand Army of the U. S.—Editor.

The Directors congratulate the members, that notwithstanding the existence of civil war, and the consequent derangement of financial affairs, which has caused a forfeiture of a large number of policies in the border Southern States the past year, the Company has done a most successful business. A very large portion of the falling off of premiums, caused by the aforementioned forfeitures, has been made up by NEW BUSINESS obtained at the North and West. The net loss of premiums, as compared with the year 1860, has been much less than was anticipated. The losses, it will be perceived, though in excess of those of the previous year, are far below the expected losses, according to the tables of mortality.

The Directors have, from the surplus, declared a dividend of 45 per cent, and a special dividend of 5 per cent on the premiums paid at the table rates, to ALL POLICIES FOR LIFE IN FORCE, ISSUED PRIOR TO JANUARY 1st, 1861. Scrip will be issued to all who have paid their premiums in cash, and all who are indebted to the Company will be credited on the books with the amount to which they are entitled.

The Directors have also ordered the payment of the Fourteenth Dividend (that declared January 1st, 1860,) to the members who were entitled to the same, when their annual premiums become due, during the year 1862; those holding Scrip to be allowed the same as cash in payment of premiums, and others to be credited the amount on their notes as they mature.

The Company was organized in 1845, on the purely mutual principle, without any subscribed capital. The members, in reality, insure one another, and the accumulated fund is entirely the result of the premiums paid by the insured, and is held by the Company in trust to meet its obligations to them.

Among the many reasons why this Company deserve patronage, are the following, namely:

It offers unusual security and advantages.

It possesses over $4,100,000 Assets.

Its Investments are in First Bonds and Mortgages on Real Estate, worth more than double the amount loaned.

It does not make temporary loans on collaterals.

The only stocks owned by it are Brooklyn, Albany, Troy and Newark City Bonds.

The insured get all the profits.

The business of the Company is confined exclusively to the insurance of Lives.

It is economical in the management of its business.

It is prompt in the payment of losses.

It accommodates the insured in the settlement of premiums, by allowing them to pay Annually, Semi-Annually, or Quarterly. Premiums on Policies for Life, if over $50 per annum, may be paid one-half in cash, and one-half in a note, bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum. The interest on premium notes is to be paid annually, in cash.;

Dividends are declared annually to all who have paid two Life premiums.

The Dividends are paid to aid the insured in settling future premiums. Those who pay their premiums in Cash receive the dividends in Cash, when redeemed; and those who give Notes, by a credit on the Notes.

The dividends declared are based upon the most accurate mathematical calculations.

This Company has now the large number of 7026 Policies in force; yet an increase in the number of persons insured renders more certain the operation of the principle of average, upon which all Life premiums are based. All friends of the Institution must therefore perceive it to be important that those connected with it should call the attention of their acquaintance to the advantages offered.

CITY ORDINANCE IN RELATION TO HACKS.

SEC. 11. The drivers or owners of public conveyances may demand and receive, for conveying passengers, the following rates and prices of fare, and no more, to-wit:

Where the time occupied does not exceed half an hour, twenty-five cents per ride for each passenger; and where the time occupied is more than half and less than one hour, fifty cents per ride for each passenger.

Children between two and ten years of age, when accompanied by their parents or guardians, shall be charged half fare; and children under two years of age shall be carried free of charge.

For the use of any public conveyance by the hour, for not more than four persons, and with the privilege of going from place to place and stopping as often as required, one dollar per hour for the first hour, and seventy-five cents for each additional hour, and for fractional hours at the rate of seventy-five cents per hour; and for each additional passenger, twenty-five cents. For the use, by the day, of such conveyance, five dollars per day. For each trunk ten cents, but no charge shall be made for any bag, valise or bundle, weighing less than fifty pounds.

When a public conveyance is used between the hours of eleven P. M. and 5 A. M., it shall be lawful to demand and receive for the same services one half more than the rates prescribed above. Any disagreement as to time and rates shall be determined by the Mayor.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Notice.—No letters will be sent from this office to places within the United States, unless the postage is pre-paid.

Unpaid letters will continue to be sent to places beyond the limits of the United States, in those cases in which letters can now be sent, without pre-payment.

Unpaid letters deposited in this office for places within the United States will be sent to the Dead Letter Office at Washington.

If the postage on a letter is part paid, and it is apparent that the deficiency in the payment was unintentional, the letter will be charged with the balance of the postage, and forwarded pursuant to its address; otherwise it will be sent to the Dead Letter Office.

Letters.—The inland postage (which must be pre-paid), for 3000 miles or under, upon single letters, is three cents; double and treble letters, twice and three times these rates.

Letters for California and Oregon, ten cents.

Every letter or parcel not exceeding half an ounce in weight shall be deemed a single letter, and every additional weight of half an ounce or less shall be charged with an additional single postage.

Drop letters, for delivery only, one cent.

Advertised letters are charged with one cent in addition to the regular postage.

Newspapers.—The postage per quarter on the regular numbers of a newspaper, mailed from the office of publication to subscribers anywhere within the United States, is as follows:

On a daily paper, 30 cents; tri-weekly, $19\frac{1}{2}$ cents; semi-weekly, 13 cents; weekly, $6\frac{1}{8}$ cents; semi-monthly, 3 cents; monthly, $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents. Payable quarterly in advance.

Transient Newspapers.—One cent each to any part of the United States, if pre-paid.

Magazines—Transient Rates.—One cent for first three ounces. Every additional ounce, or fractional part of an ounce, one cent, pre-paid. To subscribers, one half the above rates, payable quarterly in advance.

Books.—One cent an ounce for any distance under 3000 miles; over 3000 miles, two cents an ounce, pre-paid.

Circulars.—One cent each to any part of the United States, pre-paid.
