Memory International : Victims of Political Terror

<http://lists.memo.ru/>

This Russian language database is provided online by "Memory International," a Moscow foundation dedicated to the task of remembering and rehabilitating the names of persons deported or executed during the Soviet era. There are more than 3 million individuals described in the database at present, both Jews and non-Jews, listed by surname in alphabetical order.

Start by clicking on a letter at the top of the page. If Chrome translates only part of the entry (as in the example below), you must "copy and paste" into the separate Google Translator to read the rest of the information.

List of Moscow Victims

<http://mos.memo.ru/>

A second way to search is by address. Approximately 12,000 residents of Moscow were victims of political terror; "Memory International" also offers a list sorted by last-known address. Street names, in alphabetical order, are on the left side of the page. Clicking on a street gives access to the victims' names.

Here is a sample of four entries, obtained by clicking on Pskov Lane (a street in the historically Jewish neighborhood of Zaraydye). Again, if Chrome translates only part of the entry (see example below), you must "copy and paste" into the separate Google translator to read the rest of the information.

Students of the Imperial Moscow University 1865-1866

<http://kehilalinks.jewishgen.org/Moskva/1865StudentList>

See below for an excerpt from page 54 of the 1865-66 student list. One shortcoming of using an electronic translator with a scanned pdf document can be noted: the first two students on the list are unlikely to be studying "honey" but the old type-face was mis-read by the software. The translation should probably read "Med" (medicine?):

Family Space Archives

<http://arc.familyspace.ru/archive>

Family Space is a Russian genealogical site. Their archive contains city directories, census records, lists of honored citizens and other documents for Moscow and St. Petersburg, as well as the provinces of the Russian Empire. Although they offer fewer resources than "Tsarskoye Selo," their archive can be searched online (in Russian) using the following link.

<http://arc.familyspace.ru/catalog>

The Moscow resources in the Family Space archive include the Moskva Address Calendar 1875, The List of Honorary Citizens 1897, "All Moscow" Directories for 1901 and 1917, Cemetery Records 1907 vols. 1-3, and Acts of the Moscow State - v. 1 1890, Discharge Order (1571-1634), v.2 1894 Discharge Order (1535 -1659), and v.3 1901, Discharge Order (1660 - 1664).
