Jews Are Answering the Call of the Land—Ten Thousand Families Have Left Congested City Districts for the Farm

By ISRAEL J. ZEVIN

HERE is something significant about the recent movement of Jews from the urban districts to the farm life. The Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society, which is one of the foremost institutions of the Jewish community, has been active in this direction for some years. The present movement has been greatly accelerated by the financial crisis, which has made many urban Jews seek a new life in the country. The Society has been instrumental in encouraging this move, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.

The movement has been particularly successful in the United States, where the Jewish population is large and the farm land is plentiful. The Society has established a number of agricultural colonies in various parts of the country, and has provided the necessary assistance to help the settlers establish themselves. The results have been encouraging, and the Society is now working to expand its activities in this field.

The movement has also been successful in other countries, particularly in Argentina and in South America. The Jewish population in these countries is also large, and there is a great deal of farm land available for settlement. The Society has established a number of colonies in these countries, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.

The movement has been particularly successful in the United States, where the Jewish population is large and the farm land is plentiful. The Society has established a number of agricultural colonies in various parts of the country, and has provided the necessary assistance to help the settlers establish themselves. The results have been encouraging, and the Society is now working to expand its activities in this field.

The movement has also been successful in other countries, particularly in Argentina and in South America. The Jewish population in these countries is also large, and there is a great deal of farm land available for settlement. The Society has established a number of colonies in these countries, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.

The movement has been particularly successful in the United States, where the Jewish population is large and the farm land is plentiful. The Society has established a number of agricultural colonies in various parts of the country, and has provided the necessary assistance to help the settlers establish themselves. The results have been encouraging, and the Society is now working to expand its activities in this field.

The movement has also been successful in other countries, particularly in Argentina and in South America. The Jewish population in these countries is also large, and there is a great deal of farm land available for settlement. The Society has established a number of colonies in these countries, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.

The movement has been particularly successful in the United States, where the Jewish population is large and the farm land is plentiful. The Society has established a number of agricultural colonies in various parts of the country, and has provided the necessary assistance to help the settlers establish themselves. The results have been encouraging, and the Society is now working to expand its activities in this field.

The movement has also been successful in other countries, particularly in Argentina and in South America. The Jewish population in these countries is also large, and there is a great deal of farm land available for settlement. The Society has established a number of colonies in these countries, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.

The movement has been particularly successful in the United States, where the Jewish population is large and the farm land is plentiful. The Society has established a number of agricultural colonies in various parts of the country, and has provided the necessary assistance to help the settlers establish themselves. The results have been encouraging, and the Society is now working to expand its activities in this field.

The movement has also been successful in other countries, particularly in Argentina and in South America. The Jewish population in these countries is also large, and there is a great deal of farm land available for settlement. The Society has established a number of colonies in these countries, and has been successful in attracting a large number of families to the farms.